Rain, Snow Promise End To Mid-West Drought Ruin

Clouds Forecast Further Precipitation to Aid Dwarfed Plants.

Beet Area Needs Added Moisture

Eastern Slope of Rockies Is Blanketed by Snow Fall.

Chicago, May 13 (AP).—Rains and snow combined today to give the sun-parched Midwest promise of the end of the severe drought that for weeks caused terrific damage to crops.

The rains—drizzles in some sections, downpours in others—were more or less general in the drought area. Agricultural experts said that the precipitation aided the dwarfed crops but more rain was imperative to bring permanent improvement. Clouds and forecasts of rain gave farmers cheer.

The eastern slope of the Rockies, from the Canadian border almost to the Mexican line, was treated to a generous helping of snow today.

The first snow was reported last night from Montana and the storm soon swept Southward until it engulfed Wyoming, Colorado and Northern New Mexico.

Moisture Badly Needed.

While Colorado officials said drought conditions in that State had not yet become critical, the moisture was badly needed for the sugar beet crop.

Snow also fell for an hour in the territory at Scotts Bluff, Nebr., melting as it hit the ground. It brought a half inch of moisture to the beet fields which had been showing signs of an uneven stand.

Elsewhere in Nebraska, cool and damp weather prevailed after thundershowers yesterday. At Sterling 4½ inches of rain fell and today there were showers over large portions of the State.

Iowa had scattered showers but duststorms were reported again at Sioux City and Cherokee. Charles Reed, meteorologist, said yesterday's rains in Iowa were sufficient to assure germination of corn and would help the oats crop. Two men were killed in the State by lightning.

State Rain General.

In Wisconsin rain was general throughout the State, ranging from 1 inch. Minnesota and parts of South Dakota also had light rains but not sufficient to give permanent relief from the six weeks dry spell. There were a few scattered showers, none heavy, in Illinois.

Agricultural observers agreed that the rains were a help to the crops, but so far were just stopgaps pending further necessary heavy rains if crops were to be aided materially.

A. E. Anderson, the State-Federal crops statistician in Nebraska, said much wheat would do "surprisingly well" now if soaking rains followed the showers of yesterday and today.

Herriot Backs Paris Cabinet

Veteran Leader Removes Peril to Session of Parliament.

Clermont-Ferrand, France, May 13 (AP).—Sweeping aside opposition all along the line, supporters of the veteran Edouard Herriot today lined up the power Radical Socialist party behind the government of Premier Gaston Doumergue and removed the major political peril from the session of Parliament which opens Tuesday.

Herriot not only obtained support for the Doumergue cabinet, in which he is a minister of state, but also brought about the expulsion from the party of seven members of the Chamber of Deputies whose names have been connected with the Stavisky pawnshop scandal.

Recovering from the illness which interrupated his speech yesterday, Herriot, who has been premier three times and is president of the Radical Socialists, returned to the closing session of the party's congress today to receive a wild ovation.

His triumph over the "Young Turk" element of the party, which had sought to force his resignation from the Doumergue cabinet and oppose the government, was complete.

Sleeper, Michigan War Governor, Dies

Bad Axe, Mich., May 13 (AP).—Albert E. Sleeper, Michigan's wartime Governor and long a prominent figure in Republican politics of the State, died at his home here Sunday afternoon. He was 71 years old.

The former Governor had been in poor health for the past year. Funeral arrangements will probably be completed on Monday.

He became State treasurer in 1903 and served until 1912. He was elected Governor in 1915, for the first of two terms and the election gave him the greatest plurality ever given a Governor up to that time. His last term ended in 1919.

Truce Offered By Ibn Saud In Arab War

United Empire Is Goal of Warring Monarch; Troops Wait Peace.

Cairo, Egypt, May 13 (AP).—A truce was concluded in the Arabian war today as King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia offered peace conditions to the Imam Yahya of Yemen, whose territory he has invaded.

Terms of the proposed peace treaty were not revealed in dispatches which told of the cessation of fighting in the territory between the captured seaport of Hodeidah and Sana, the capital of Yemen, against which King Ibn Saud's troops were reported moving in the latest prevoius messages from the war zone.

King Ibn Saud ordered his troops to cease their campaign until he has received the reply of the Iman to his proposals. Dispatches from Jidda said the Imam's representatives there were hopeful of the outcome of the negotiations.

The armistice between King Ibn Saud and the Imam Yahya found the former's troops in possession of a considerable portion of the territory of Yemen, the little country in southwest Arabia which had remained independent of both Saudian and European control.

King Ibn Saud, who changed the name of his country from "The Combined Kingdoms of Nejd and Hejaz" to Saudy Arabia a year ago, had been represented by his countrymen in Europe as determined to add Yemen to his domain and create a united Arabian empire.

Differences over the border of the two countries have threatened war for several years. Ibn Saud seized the important Yemeni port of Hodeidah, May 3.

With the Emir Feisal, heir to the Saudi throne in command, the Saudi forces occupied the seaport and moved on toward the capital city, Sana, where the Yemeni forces had rallied and prepared for a defense behind brick walls.

Reports from the war zone during the past week have been conflicting. Three divisions of the Saudi army were reported ready to attack the capital and force the Imam to relinquish his authority to a son of the Saudi King.

Honolulu Editor Sees Sugar Bill Court Test

New York, May 13 (AP).—Riley H. Allen, editor of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin, said today that "the full-fledged American Territory of Hawaii" may find it necessary to test the constitutionality of the recent sugar control bill.

"The Jones-Costigan sugar measure," he asserted, just prior to leaving for the West Coast, "is an act which discriminates against a domestic industry in one part of the United States in favor of the same industry in another."

$90,000 Fire In Winchester Halts Worship

Churchgoers Turn Firemen Apartment Dwellers Forced to Flee.

By C. B. Carr.

Winchester, Va., May 13.—Fire in the rear of a second-hand furniture store in the heart of Winchester's downtown business district this morning caused damage estimated at $90,000 to six business places and two apartment buildings.

The fire, discovered in the rear of a second-hand furniture store and adjacent to a waste-paper plant operated by Roy Larrick, quickly shot up several hundred feet in the air as churchgoers deserted nearby edifices, some filled with smoke, and clamored to the scene of the blaze.

A general fire alarm brought all available fire-fighting apparatus to the blaze. The fire spread rapidly through the Winchester Furniture Co., the Professional Building and the H. W. Barrett cabinet shop.

Apartment Dwellers Flee.

Before the blaze had reached the second and third floors of these buildings, where a score of apartments housed more than 100 persons, firemen rushed through the buildings and hurried residents to the street. The occupants found it impossible to remove their personal belongings and more than $5,000 of the total damage was owing to

Racer Saves Dog, Kills 7

French Driver, Car Out of Control, Brings Death to Crowd.

Fontainebleau, France, May 13 (AP). Five men and two women were killed and six persons injured today as the driver of an automobile in a hill race tried to avoid hitting a stray dog and plunged into a group of spectators.

The dog had wandered across the road where the race was being held in Fontainebleau Forest. Spectators waved to the driver, Eric Cochin, a military aviator, calling his attention to the animal.

Cochin pulled quickly on his steering wheel to miss the animal, and the speeding car went out of control. A few seconds later it had killed six persons whose thoughts had been centered on saving the life of the mongrel. Cochin died a short time later in a hospital.

One of the women was decapitated as the car struck her. Two of those killed were soldiers from the artillery school here.

The race, arranged by a Fontainebleu automobibel club, attracted a huge throng of spectators, who were scattered along the course.

Wife of Doctor Held in Kidnap Suspect Killing

Mrs. Muench Is Jailed as 'Finger Woman' in Machine Gunning.

St. Louis, May 13 (AP).—Mrs. Nellie Tipton Muench, comely wife of a St. Louis physician, today was rearrested and lodged in jail following the machine-gun killing late yesterday of John C. Johnson, Colored, one of five men indicted with Mrs. Muench in the 1931 kidnaping of Dr Isaac D. Kelley.

Mrs. Muench, described by the county attorney's office as the "finger woman" in the Kelley case, had been free on $50,000 bond. Her arrest was on a capias ordered by Circuit Judge Robert F. McElhinney.

The capias was asked by John Wolfe, associate county prosecutor, who said Johnson and Mrs. Muench were the only defendants in the kidnaping case to win their freedom on bond and that he feared for the safety of the woman.

Meanwhile county officers made a vain effort to identify two men who drove to the home of a deputy sheriff, fired a volley of shots from a machine gun at Johnson, and fled in a motor car.

Johnson's body was pierced by five bullets. As the gunmen fled, one fired three revolver shots at relatives of Deputy Harry D. Newbold, at whose home Johnson had been living because officers feared he might be subject to attack.

At the time of the attack, Johnson was dozing in the sun on a small platform adjoining the Newbold garage. His assailant crept from a parked automobile to within a few feet of the victim, and opened fire without warning.

County officials said that a statement by Johnson, relating how

6-Run Attack In 7th Inning Ends Bridges

Detroit Pitcher's Lack of Control Leads to Loss Before 10,000.

Cronin Drives in Three Runs; Whitehill Gets Credit for Victory.

By Shirley L. Povich (Sports Editor of The Post).

The Nats stretched their losing streak to four and six-ninths games yesterday before they caught up with Tom Bridges, of the Tigers, in the seventh inning. Then they won, 7 to 4, and zoomed all the way out of fifth place into a tie for fourth.

The Tigers were headed toward victory until the seventh, when Bridges collapsed under the weight of two bases on balls, a hit batter, a two-base hit and a couple of singles, dumping them into defeat.

Six large and luscious Washington runs came cascading across the plate in that seventh inning, at a time when the Tigers were sunning themselves in a 3-1 lead and the 10,000 in the stands visioning another triumph for Bridges, whose habit of beating the Nats was thought incurable.

Fred Schulte made the skids ready for Bridges, who had been pitching four-hit ball, when he led off that seventh inning with a double down the third-base line, but it was no fault of Bridges, though, when Johnny Stone beat out a hit to Owen that refused to roll foul. It was very much Bridges' fault, however, when he hit Ossie Bluege on the elbow to fill the bases.

Bridges Gets Hurt.

"This hurts me worse than it does you," Bridges probably said as he whacked Bluege with his first pitch, and it did. Along came Eddie Phillips to slam a long fly into center field that scored one run and moved the others up. They sent Dave Harris in to bat for Earl Whitehill and Bridges solved this problem by passing Harris to fill the bases again.

But this walking business of Bridges apparently became habit-forming because he also walked Kuhel to force the tying run over the plate. By this time, Mickey Cochrane, making his managerial debut in Washington, deduced that Bridges was not effective, and he hauled him out of there in favor of Carl Fischer, an escaped Nat.

Buddy Myer slammed a long fly into right field to score the third run of the inning and then Fischer filled 'em up again by hitting Manush on the back of the neck, hurting nothing but the ball. Along came Joe Cronin to emerge from his batting slump with a single into center, and two more runs trickled across the plate. By this time, anything could happen, so Schulte got his second hit of the

N. Y. Police Round Up Gang in Killer Hunt

New York, May 13 (AP).—Armed with machine guns and tear gas bombs, detectives and an emergency squad of 50 policemen raided a room in a midtown hotel today and arrested six men, whom they described as "Western gangsters," and one woman.

The raid was made as a result of a tip picked up by four detectives looking for the men, who last week shot and killed Detective James Garvey and wounded Detective Francis Gleason on April 21.

Police Save Slayers From Mob Vengeance

Ottawa, Ill., May 13 (AP).—Spirited away from a crowd that threatened to lynch them, three youths, said by Sheriff E. J. Welter to have confessed the slaying of a Dana (Ill.) grocer during an attempted robbery, were under heavy guard here tonight.

The youths were Vincent Okaren, 20, Rockdale; Joseph Kowalezyk, 16, and his brother, Walter, 18, of Morris. They previously were inmates of the St. Charles School for Boys.

Man Killed, 13 Hurt in D. C. Sunday Automobile Crashes

A Washington man was killed and 13 persons were injured yesterday in traffic accidents throughout the city and nearby sections.

John O'Donnoghue, 65, retired employe of the Government Printing Office, was killed in an automobile crash near Fredericksburg, Va. Reports said the machine in which he was a passenger crashed into a pole after swerving to avoid a small dog lying in the center of the highway.

The car, police reported, careened from the road sideswiped a bridge abutment and struck the pole head-on. Mrs. Dorothy Swift, 30, of 3217 Connecticut avenue northwest, driver of the machine, was hurried to Mary Washington Hospital in Fredericksburg. She suffered a badly mangled right hand and possible internal injuries.

O'Donnoghue, father of six children, was pinned beneath the wreckage. He was pronounced dead at the scene. Relatives at his home, 444 Newton place northwest, said he left Washington Saturday night on a motor trip with friends. Mrs. Swift told police they were on their way to visit her mother in Richmond, Va.

She said she failed to see the dog in time to stop and attempted to swerve at a high rate of speed. The dog was unhurt.

O'Donnoghue was retired several months ago. He was a member of Columbia Typographical Union.

Four persons were injured in a head-on collision at Twenty-second and Q streets northwest. A small sedan, attempting a left-hand turn, crashed into a truck. Both machines were badly damaged.

Harry Edwards, 30, of 102 E street northwest, driver of the truck, and two friends, Miss Pearl Cook, 30 of the E street address, and John

Soviet Ready to Talk U. S. Debts and Credit

Funding of Kerensky Balance to Be Predicated on America Opening Negotiations and Pact Being Tied to Trade Accord.

Moscow, May 13 (U.P.).—The Soviet government is prepared to discuss funding of the controversial Kerensky debt, in connection with the larger question of credits and trade, whenever the United States opens the issue formally, it was stated today.

The United Press learned, however, that whatever means the Soviet government may be considering for funding this obligation, they do not include payment in silver.

The question of the $187,000,000 obligation of the brief Kerensky government to the United States Treasury has been brought into the foreground of Soviet-American relations by the Johnson bill. It was interpreted to mean no private agency in the United States can grant loans to Russia until the debt was funded. The new Soviet Export-Import Bank, set up by the United States Government, was exempted from the Johnson act ban, but its directors have announced it, too, will withhold loans until the Soviets present a satisfactory debt settlement.

Although there has been no official statement from the Soviet government regarding the debt, its viewpoint may be summarized reliably as follows:

In the first place, the present regime does not admit any responsibility for obligations of previous regimes. However, in order to facilitate trade and remove this sore spot from Soviet-American relations, Moscow is willing to negotiate with Washington, but only if President Roosevelt takes the initiative.

Josef Stalin, Soviet dictator, and other leaders have intimated that if the United States advanced an ample loan to finance purchase of machinery and other products in America, the Soviet government might pay an unusually high rate of interest, part of which could be considered as payment on the Kerensky debt.

Soviet officials were surprised today by reports from abroad that Moscow planned to fund the Kerensky debt in silver.

Soviet currency is backed by gold and platinum. No silver is used.

Exports of silver are considered necessary from Siberian mines to help maintain the Soviet Union's balance of trade with other nations. There can not, therefore, be any

War Chest Is Urged to Curb Crime

$2,500,000 for Armored Cars, Guns Considered by Budget Director.

(Associated Press.)

A war chest of between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000 to equip the Government's crime fighters was disclosed last night as being under consideration by Justice Department officials and Lewis Douglas, director of the budget.

Establishment of 10 or 12 additional offices of the Division of Investigation, enrollment of 270 men and the purchase of 20 armored cars, 200 speedy squad cars and a quantity of submachine guns, rifles, bulletproof vests and tear gas equipment are contemplated.

Surveys are under way to determine which types of equipment are the best.

The department now has 419 agents in 24 offices.

With the 12-point legislative program proposed by Attorney General Cummings being gradually accepted by Congress, the Justice Department has been represented as in need of additional administrative facilities. In addition to wanting equipment for the men who chase the Dillingers, the "Pretty Boy" Floyds and other bandits, officials pointed out that facilities for prosecution would also need extension. They observed that the burdens of United States attorneys, marshals and their aids would increase.

Final House action on seven of the Cumings anticrime measures—ranging from one to permit the death penalty in kidnaping cases to another which would make it a Federal offense to flee across State lines to escape prosecution for crime—appeared likely to be taken today. Majority Leader Byrns said he hoped the House could act on the conference reports on the crime bills and send them along to the Senate for final Congressional action.

In view of the complete agreement this week by Senate and House conferees, who accepted the House amendments to virtually all the measures, House adoption of the conference reports was regarded as routine, and no Senate hitch was expected.

"Big" Money Charge Made In Campaign

Pinchot Group Promises Rigid Probe of All Contributions.

By Raymond Clapper.

Philadelphia, May 13.—Widespread but unverified charges that important money is to be thrown into the fight to keep Gov. Gifford Pinchot out of the United States Senate dominated the closing days of Pennsylvania's most bitter primary fight which will be decided Tuesday.

Pinchot forces gave notice that they would go behind official reports in search of hidden contributions. All voters were called upon to volunteer confidentially any information they might have regarding allegedly improper use of money. From the Democratic side it was stated that Federal agents also were watching the situation.

From Pinchot's side the charges has been that the forces seeking to renominate Senator David A. Reed on the Republican ticket had made excessive use of money. It is generally felt by politicians that the Senator must pile up a heavy vote in Philadelphia to defeat the galloping Governor whose popularity in rural and coal mining sections of the State has survived many years as an office holder and candidate. Where politicians gathered over the week-end, the opinion was advanced that Senator Reed's fate depended upon whether enough money was poured into Philadelphia for "election day expenses" to produce the needed majorities.

Reed Has Fought Hard.

Senator Reed, conservative, dignified, has gone into the State and in face of some odds, conducted an aggressive barnstorming campaign, shaking hands with farmers and miners, and swinging at Gov. Pinchot with such hard knuckles that the veteran Rough Rider, who is no mollycoddle as a campaigner himself, has cried out that the Senator was "fouling" him. This fight, the most energetic Senator Reed was ever compelled to make, has

Paris, May 13 (U.P.).—Communists threw acid and daubed red paint on statues of Joan of Arc today during ceremonies commemorating the heroic maid of Orleans.

Violence marred nation-wide demonstrations for the saint arranged by royalists and Catholics.

Reds sought to ruin the statue of Joan in front of St. Augustin Church. Diverting police by a quarrel with taxi drivers they threw acid on the statue.

At Lyons the Reds daubed Joan's statue with crimson paint. Police and citizens finally drove the Communists from the saint's pedestal.

Will Insert Authorizing Clause in Metal Bill Under Study.

Complete Default Seen Otherwise

Morgenthau Hints Favor of Plan; Senate Bloc Behind Idea.

Great Britain may be permitted to pay silver into the Treasury to meet her June 15 war debt installment of $85,870,000.

Senator Elmer Thomas, inflationist leader, will add to the bill on which the silverites expect to agree today or tomorrow a clause renewing authority to receive silver on the war debts.

The subject was mentioned during the recent conference which President Roosevelt had with the silver bloc. Senator Borah objected that he did not want to see the silver issue sidetracked in half-measures. However, he said last night he would not necessarily oppose the Thomas idea.

Other silverites favor it. Senator Adams, of Colorado, declared yesterday that if taking silver would contribute to solution of the debt impasse and at the same time add to silver reserves he would approve.

Morgenthau Favor Hinted.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau indicated to the silverites during the White House conference that he favored accepting silver on the war debts. The first British token was paid in silver under authority, since expired, in the Thomas inflation amendment to the farm bill.

State Department officials have shown interest in the possibility, even though remote, of affording the British a chance to send us silver on June 15. The presumption is that the British treasury could obtain the silver from the Indian treasury at a discount. The Pittman silver agreement, reached at the London economic conference, but not technically binding, presents no obstacle, according to officials.

That is, they take the view that it would conform to the purpose of

Trans-U. S. Air Record Broken

Jack Frye in Transport Ship Makes New York in 11½ Hours.

Newark, N. J., May 13 (U.P.).—Jack Frye, flying mail from Los Angeles to New York, today broke the transcontinental speed record for transport planes by covering the distance in 11 hours and 31 minutes.

The flight precourses regular overnight delivery of mail in New York, from the Pacific Coast. The plane, a weirdly-streamlined Northrup Gamma, was designed in response to the Postoffice Department's request two years ago for equipment to perform such service.

Frye, alone in the ship, carried 355 pounds of mail and 85 pounds of air express.

The pilot achieved terrific speed by ascending to 14,000 feet. Meeting bad weather over the Midwest, he rose to 17,000 feet but found his motor lost some of its efficiency in the stratosphere.

The record compares with Eddie Rickenbacker's 13 hours and 2 minutes, established earlier this year in a Douglas transport carrying mail and passengers. Jimmy Haziip's transcontinental mark of 10 hours, 19 minutes, made in a racing plane, still stands.

"I had to fight my way over and through snowstorms, rain and ice, but the ice was not serious," Frye said. "However, it was enough to coat the windshield.

"The plane performed beautifully. I didn't have it wide open, but used about 60 per cent power in the West and 75 per cent in the East."

Frye, veteran Transcontinental and Western Airways pilot, averaged 227 miles an hour. The test was authorized by the Postoffice Department and marked restoration of TWA's temporary air-mail contract.

Turkey Ratifies Trade Agreement With Soviet

Ankara, Turkey, May 13 (AP).—The Turkish Parliament today ratified a treaty with Russia under which the Soviet Union will give Turkey $8,000,000 in credit for machinery and merchandise, to be repaid in 25 years with Turkish products.

Construction of a large textile factory at Cesaree, in Middle Anatolia, under the direction of Soviet technicians, will begin this week as the first big project under the Turkish five-year industrial program.

Thomas Plans to Insert Clause in Measure Under Study.

the agreement for Indian to release more than her quota of silver, provided the metal is for absorption into a monetary base.

Full Default an Alternative.

Officials have explored renewal of the authority to accept silver as a possible alternative to complete British default. The British Cabinet's decision might be considerably affected by a chance to pay in silver and so avoid the stigma of being branded a "defaulter" under the Johnson act.

Officials frankly recognize that the idea is largely a desperate effort to find some way out of the debt impasse. It is taken for granted that the British government will not in any case undertake to meet the $85,000,000 installment in full if payment is required, as now, in dollars—or gold. That is regarded as politically, if not economically, out of the question.

Under the interpretation of the Johnson act communicated to the British government by Secretary of State Hull, payment of anything less than the full installment will make the British government subject to the Johnson act's ban. The one exception would be that the British were able to demonstrate inability to pay the full in stallment.

Would Halt Bond Sale.

There is little probability that Mr. Roosevelt himself would pronounce the British in default if only part payment, or another token payment, is received. The stigma would only arise when and if the British sought to float bonds in this country. Then, under Senator Johnson's construction of his law, the Government would be bound to prevent such a sale of bonds.

The problem before the British government is to avoid, if possible, being put in the position of being denied access to American capital markets. Silver might, perchance, afford a medium for meeting the June 15 payment in full. The silverites would be interested in it chiefly because it would add toward the 25 per cent silver reserve which is their goal.

The British might then look for readjustment of the debts after the fall elections. The price may be high in view of the slim hope of mutually acceptable debt adjustment by next December. London appears to feel, however, that Mr. Roosevelt would tackle the question more directly when the elections falling in hi smidterm are over.

Credit Worries Britain.

Beyond that, the British government is anxious to maintain its credit. That is why the token payments have been made all along. They have been, in effect, payments against the day when it would be politically possible to readjust the debts.

Senator Borah, who has shown a more sympathetic attitude than most members of Congress, remarked last night that he felt the British and French had been "misled" into thinking that the write-down of German reparations at Lausanne would be followed by a compensatory write-down of the debts to the United States.

However, he holds, with most of his colleagues, if not all of them, that the British can pay. The difficulties, not merely political, but economic, in obtaining dollars so far have had scant attention in Congress.

Unless further unforeseen deadlock develops, the silver bill should be agreed upon and rushed through Congress in quick order. Thus, the Treasury's authority to accept silver probably will be established well in advance of the June 15 due date on the debts.

Doctor's Wife Held In Kidnap Slaying

Bart Davit, Angelo Rosegrant, Felix McDonald and another man held Dr. Kelley captive in Johnson's small farm house in St. Louis County, was submitted to the grand jury which indicted the six persons.

Davit, Rosegrant, McDonald and Tommy Wilders were indicted with Mrs. Muench and Johnson. McDonald is a convict in the Missouri Penitentiary at Jefferson City. Davit and Rosegrant are held in the St. Louis County Jail, and Wilders is a fugitive.

Freed Without Ransom.

Kelley was released after being held for ten days, without the payment of ransom which had been demanded.

The prosecutor's office said the reputed confession of Johnson had been carefully guarded, with the intention of using his testimony against the other defendants at their trials.

Mrs. Muench was questioned last night at her home, but was not taken into custody at that time because officers had no authority for that action. The capias was issued this moning.

Mrs. Muench appeared at ease as she was placed in the woman's ward of the jail, which she shares with two white women and a colored woman. Before the door clanged she told her physician husband "not to worry about me," and ordered a lunch brought to her cell.

Associate Prosecutor Wolfe said he would oppose any effort to obtain the woman's release on new bond.

'Important Money' Charged In Pennsylvania Primary

made headway. But as election day approaches, the result was generally felt to be in great doubt with Pinchot apparently having an edge, and the outcome depending upon the Philadelphia turnout for Reed.

Though it is nothing new in Pennsylvania politics to hear the frank talk about money, this Reed-Pinchot campaign has, until toward the closing days, been lifted considerably above the usual level prevailing in this vast Commonwealth and has been pretty much of a fight over the New Deal of President Roosevelt. From this point of view the Pennsylvania Republican Senatorial fight is of considerable National significance.

Senator Reed, so closely in sympathy with the Mellon interests and the other great property influences in the State that he has been called by Pinchot the errand boy of Mellon, has lashed out aggressively at the Roosevelt New Deal. He has spared the President personally, because of Mr. Roosevelt's great popularity even among Pennsylvania Republicans to whom the best Democrat has usually been deemed far below the worst Republican.

NRA Called Oppressive.

But he has not spared the Roosevelt program. He has painted NRA as an instrument of big business, an oppressor of the little man. AAA he has held up as a device for collecting processing taxes from this rich State and handing them over to what Joe Grundy called the "backward States" of the South ruled by Democratic party leaders.

He has assailed the cost of the recovery program and what he terms the robbery of the gold devaluation policy. He is a frank, unashamed, sharp-tongued Old Dealer who has refused to pull his punches in face of considerable evidence that the Roosevelt program is more popular in Pennsylvania than he wishes it were.

Against this clear-cut conservative is the Republican New Dealer, the rangy, light-footed Pinchot, who has a good deal of Franklin Roosevelt's skill as a political salesman. A Rough Rider under the redoubtable Teddy, a foe of the old order even in the ancient Bull Moose days, a man whose campaign stock in trade has been the Mellons, the Grundys, the utilities and the other sacred idols of the sedate old Union League, Gov. Pinchot has pledged his allegiance to President Roosevelt in alternate sentences. If anything, he is ready to go to Washington and add a few more cards to the New Deal.

Norris Supports Pinchot.

He brought Senator Norris into the State to campaign for him on behalf of the pro-Roosevelt Republican insurgents. He induced Mayor LaGuardia of New York to speak for him on the air. His energetic, red-haired wife, who is a kind of Mrs. Roosevelt in Pennsylvania, has been out barnstorming for her husband whose health has compelled him to curtail his speaking schedule somewhat.

Mrs. Pinchot, too, has championed the New Deal except that she—just like a woman—has sailed into Gen. Johnson and tweaked the Blue Eagle's tail feathers in behalf of the workers who, she says, have not been protected by the doughty general from chiseling employers.

Of course, the campaign, as always in Pennsylvania, is cluttered up with a good deal of side play and local rabbit punching and gouging in the clinches. But in the main, this Democratic President in the White House is the overshadowing issue in the senatorial fight, and one which elevates the contest above the usual paper money standard which obtains in Pennsylvania politics.

Guffey Leads Democrats.

Next in importance is the Democratic senatorial contest. Joseph E. Guffey, former Democratic National committeeman, a sort of political accident who was the original Roosevelt man in a pro-Smith Democratic setting, is running for the Democratic senatorial nomination from the great vantage point of the Roosevelt coattails. He is regarded as almost a sure winner.

His opponent, Roland S. Morris, former Ambassador to Japan, is a little nearer kinship with David A. Reed than with the New Deal Democrats, though he protests that he supported Roosevelt after the nomination. He was for Smith before, which has excluded him from Administration favor.

While the National Administration insists it is not interfering in primary campaigns, Postmaster General James A. Farley is favorable to Guffey, has given him control of Federal appointments in the State and done everything but indorse him publicly. In fact, he has done more than indorse him publicly; he has given him the weapons which make it almost impossible for him to lose.

Guffey's New Deal instincts are not those of Pinchot. In fact they are about as far apart as Pinchot and Reed actually. Talk in Pennsylvania is that if Pinchot is nominated, big business money will get behind Guffey. He's in fairly solid around Pittsburgh, was a member of Senator Reed's wedding party, and doesn't get down to details in discussing New Deal principles as they might apply to affairs in Pennsylvania.

Party Growing Rapidly.

It makes the Pinchot crowd snort to even think of Guffey as a disciple of Roosevelt. His nomination will be construed in Pennsylvania as solely a demonstration of the power of the Roosevelt name. The Democratic party is growing rapidly in Pennsylvania and it is no empty honor that Joe Guffey is gunning for.

For Governor, William A. Schnader, Philadelphia lawyer and present attorney general, is the Republican favorite. Lieut. Gov. Edward C. Shannon is rated as next best. Fourteen others are on the Republican ballot, six of whom withdrew after the ballots were printed. On the Democratic side, George H. Earle, former minister to Austria, running on the New Deal ticket with Guffey, is regarded as the likely candidate for Governor. Four others are on the ticket with him.

These gubernatorial candidates are an oddly assorted lot for the top job on the Nation's second State. The first position on the Republican ballot is considered worth 25,000 to 50,000 votes just because the less intelligent Pennsylvania voters are apt to mark the first name on the list.

This pole position is held by a one-legged veteran, Louis G. Karzis, of Pittsburgh, who has made no campaign. The second position is held by Jay W. Sechler, a Philadelphia lawyer, not very well known. But, such are the processes of Democracy in Pennsylvania politics that his friends predict he will get a sizable vote because his name begins with an "S," the same as the two leading candidates, the idea being that many voters will see the first letter and think they are voting for either Schnader of Shannon.

Hopes for "Nordic" Vote.

Furthermore his name is sandwiched between two foreign sounding names, those of Karzis and Margiotti, and his friends expect he will benefit by the rebound of the Nordics as they shy back from the names of his bedfellows on either side.

Charles J. Margiotti is prominent in the Moose lodge, an attorney in the lottery trial of Senator James J. Davis. His vote will show what the membership of the Moose lodge is.

Half a dozen judges are on the ticket sprinkled among college professors, former congressmen, perpetual drys, a Pottstown butcher, and an ousted State official, who entered as a spite candidate in one of Pinchot's strong coal counties.

In this line-up there has been a good deal of last minute trading, which is one of those complicated affairs that make Pennsylvania politics such a fascinating game to participants and add gray hairs on the heads of out-of-town reporters who take them seriously.

The Pennsylvania city ballot carries 135 names of candidates, indicating that there are still a good many people here looking for employment.

Warned on Use of Money.

Warning against the use of money in the primary election and notice that expenses and contributions would be investigated came today from the secretary of the Commonwealth, Richard J. Beamish, a Pinchot man.

"Officially, as the secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, I am today warning every candidate for a State-wide office that it is my intention to enforce strictly and to the full letter of the law the statutes relating to the receipts and expenditures of candidates in this primary," Beamish said in a speech at Easton."

"I hereby serve notice that I am going to examine rigorously every item in every expense account. More than that, I am going behind the official reports and if I find that money has been contributed for which no account has been made, or that money has been spent for which no entry appears upon the report, I will enforce with the full power of my office the penalties for failure to make such reports. These penalties carry both fines and imprisonment and will be enforced if the great power with which I am clothed can enforce them.

Refers to Vare's Election.

"It is well at this time to recall the fact that illegal and excessive contributions and expenditures have in the past been sufficient for disqualification to hold high office. I refer to the disqualification of William S. Vare for a seat in the United States Senate.

"I hereby invite any person in Pennsylvania who shall have knowledge of any contribution or expenditure in the interest of any candidate that is believed to be improper to communicate with me immediately."

Yesterday Pinchot's campaign manager said that Reed forces were spending so much money that the Senator would never be seated if nominated and elected. Guffey said that Federal Department of Justice agents "have hit the slush fund trail and will be on guard at the primary against election frauds and exhorbitant expenditures by all the senatorial candidates.

President's Mother Says Mother's Day Should Prompt Service.

New York, May 13 (AP).—Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, in an address today said Mother's Day was a call to practical, and if need be sacrificial, service "in honor of those who in other years have sacrificed for us."

"It suggests opportunities for helping mothers who have lost their husbands, and children who have lost their mothers—of doing that which we would have others do unto us if conditions were reversed."

Her message was broadcast.

"There are several organizations that on Mother's Day are offering special opportunities for such service," Mrs. Roosevelt said.

Among these she listed:

The National Association of Maternity Centers, the Motion Picture Research Council and Miss Martha Berry's School, in Georgia.

Mrs. Roosevelt passed the day quietly and in the evening she was guest of honor at the country's largest Mother's Day dinner, held under the auspices of World Peaceways.

Eight Bodies Sought Aboard Sunken Tug

Bremen, Germany, May 13 (AP). Salvage crews working from two lighters sought today to recover bodies of eight persons who went down in the steel tug Mercur yesterday, after she was rammed by the steamer Albert Ballin, which she was towing into port.

The victims—who included the wife of the tug's cook— were believed to have lived in a watertight compartment of the tug for three hours after it sank, rescuers during that period having heard knocking inside.

water and smoke filtering through the apartments.

Buildings in which the business and apartments were located were owned by the Funk estate, of Winchester, and Phillip O. Faulkner, of Martinsburg, W. Va.

Crisman's furniture store suffered upward of $10,000 loss as their stock was drenched with water. Crisman was said to carry no insurance.

Both the Faulkner and Funk Buildings, landmarks in downtown Winchester, suffered damage which is believed will aggregate upward of $50,000.

Church Services Delayed.

Billows of smoke poured into Grace Lutheran Church, nearby where special Mother's Day services were about to start, driving the communicants from the place and delaying services for nearly two hours. In all Winchester churches services were delayed as Fire Chief C. Lee Barr ordered electric power cut off in the city. Fear that the fire would burn a high-powered transmission line caused the action, he said.

The fire broke out at a time when the streets of Winchester were thronged with churchgoers and hundreds of men dressed in their Sunday attire, grabbed hose lines, axes and ladders to battle the blaze. All Winchester fire-fighting units are volunteer.

A gentle southwest wind fanned the blaze away from the lumber yard of John W. Rosenberger & Co., Inc., 50 feet away from the Crisman store, where several million feet of dry lumber was stored.

Glass-Barkley Bill for Trade Loans Up Today

Congressional Leaders Plan to Speed Pace Until Adjournment.

(Associated Press.)

Administration leaders whipped up their forces last night to put Congress over the half dozen or so high hurdles that intervene between now and an adjournment in early June.

The Senate will try to take the first of them today with leaders hopeful of passing the Glass-Barkley bill to set up a half-billion dollar joint Government and private fund for loans to business.

Next will come the communications control measure. Senate leaders plan to begin work on it by mid-week, bringing to the floor a measure subjected to long and controversial hearings at both ends of the Capitol.

The tariff issue also will confront the Senate before adjournment. This time, instead of involving horizontal raising or lowering of trade barriers, the tariff proposal embodies the Roosevelt-proposed plan of separate trade treaties with foreign nations, the treaties to be negotiated and consummated by the President without approval of the Senate. The House already has approved the plan.

Mr. Roosevelt also is expected to send to Capitol Hill his recommendation for the Housing program, a plan invilving Governmental encouragement of a big-scale new home and repair program.

Another item of a "must" nature, because of the chahacter of existing temporary legislation, is the bank deposit guarantee bill. Unless Congress acts before July 1, the bank guarantee law becomes permanent and the Administration wants the temporary puan extended for another year.

Consideration by the Senate of the President's appointment of Rexford Guy Tugwell as Undersecretary of Agriculture may bring trouble. The way for critical debate has been opened in recent months by attacks on the co-called "brain trust." Tugwell has been a main target of "brain trust" comment.

The loanto industry bill, while it has been virtually lost sight of in the press of other legislation, also is viewed on Capitol Hill as a ready source of trouble.

While optimistic members of the Democratic leadership talk of winding up the session between May 2 6and June 2, others of the high command guess at June 9. Representative Byrns, of Tennessee, Democratic floor leader, said today the House could pass all the Presidentially-recommended measures by May 25. He included in his version of the "must" list a new oil industry regulation bill, to bolster provisions of the industrial recovery act.

The House Ways and Means Committee will meet Monday to vote on the Lewis unemployment insurance bill, which has the support of President Roosevelt.

Final action on the series of anti-crime and racketeering bills is expected by leaders early in the week, the House and Senate having agreed to most of them in conference.

Soviet Ready to Talk Debts Linked With Credit and Trade

New Moscow Policy Brings Surprise Here

Moscow reports that the Soviet government is willing to begin discussing the question of the Kerensky debt if the discussion could be made a part of the whole issue of old debts and new credits caused mild surprise among well-informed observers here.

It has been understood negotiations over the outstanding questions not cleared up at the time of recognition last November had been going on intermittently ever since. Throughout most of the time, observers believe, the talks have taken place in Moscow between Ambassador Bullitt and Soviet officials. Certain supplementary conversations have occurred here, notably when Ambassador Troyanovsky called upon President Roosevelt a fortnight ago.

At the time of recognition it was said agreement over outstanding questions had progressed far enough to make an early settlement probable. This appeared to mean agreement to discuss debts, claims and counter-claims had been reached in principle; it only remaining to work out the figures.

Both Sides Stubborn.

Experts professed themselves at a loss to understand what Moscow meant by urging President Roosevelt to take the initiative. It had been assumed the initiative stage had been passed long ago.

Note was taken of the suggestion of willingness to talk old debts, provided new credits were discussed simultaneously. This represents something of an advance over Moscow's earlier position, where credits were to come first, but it is still, close followers point out, a considerable distance short of the American thesis that the slate should be wiped clean before new financing was discussed.

The delay in settling outstanding issues between the two countires is generally assumed to be due to this inability to get together on the precedence of debts over credits or vice versa. Both sides appear firm and willing to try to outwait the other.

"Last-Man" Defense Plans for Belgium Opposed by Army

Brussels, May 13 (AP).—The controversy over whether Belgium shall prepare to defend her border to the last man had reached a point today which threatened an open break between the government and the army.

Authoritative sources said Defense Minister Albert Deveze is ready to demand that Gen. Nuyten, chief of staff, submit to the government's plans for defense against invasion or resign.

The general, who claims support of specialists in military tactics, objects to the government plan as "impractical," declaring the present army could not possibly defend the 160-mile eastern border, over which German troops poured in 1914.

The government has spent $50,000,000 in carrying out its plans for fortifying the border, and is committed to the "last man defense" policy.

Gen. Nuyten and his associates stand out for the "fighting retreat" tactics of the World War, depending of the British for aid.

The government plan was authoritatively stated not to involve an expectation of prompt aid from France in event of an invasion.

Trade Bureau Shake-up Near As Thorp Quits

Dickinson Takes Charge; McAdoo Man Stripped of His Duties.

(Associated Press.)

Major changes in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce neared yesterday following the resignation of William Thorp as bureau head.

The Assistant Secretary of Commerce, John Dickinson, friend of Thorp, who had charged that the latter was forced out through patronage "mongering," took over the bureau as acting head under Presidential order.

At the same time H. Russell Amory, assistant bureau chief and protege of Senator McAdoo (Democrat), California, who ordinarily would have become acting head, was stripped of most of his official duties, although still retaining title and office.

Amory, charged on one side with having led a faction to prevent the Senate confirmation of Thorp, and defended on the other side as "scapegoat" and "victim of circumstances," had nothing to say yesterday.

Amory worked for McAdoo in the latter's political campaign, and was appointed to the bureau by Secretary Roper, a friend of McAdoo. Roper declined to discuss the situation, but he indorsed the action of the President in turning over the bureau to Dickinson, who said he would see if it could be run without political manipulation, and that on that determination his future relationship to the department depended.

Dickinson apparently had been given carte blanche to make changes where needed. He selected H. R. Stutaman, chief of the District office section of the bureau, to investigate personnel, and otherwise to give aid. Dickinson intends hence forth to devote half his time to the bureau and half to his work as Assistant Secretary.

FRC Approves Forest Work Expansion Plan

Virginia Land Is Included in Program to Boost Rehabilitation.

President Roosevelt's emergency conservation program made new progress yesterday with the announcement by Secretary of War Dern that his Forest Reservation Commission has approved expansion of existing National forest units by more than 3,000,000 acres and immediate purchase of 762,186 acres of timber lands.

Included in the expansion program are 658,000 acres in southwest Virginia, a new forest purchase area to be known as the Clinch unit. Funds for the purchases are to be paid from the $20,000,000 allocated the commission by the President from conservation appropriations.

Dern, who is president of the commission, said acquisition of the new units, nearly doubling the National forest area in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, will enable the United States Forest Service and cooperating agencies to consolidate fire protection, combat excessive erosion in many portions of the Tennessee drainage system and put thousands of acres of forests in better productive condition.

Rehabilitation of the new areas, Dern said, also is expected to aid flood control and hydro-electric developments by providing continuous and even stream flows. Among the industries to be aided by the project the War Secretary included pulp and paper mills, wood-using manufactures and rayon mills.

Immediate purchases are to cost $1,853,560 and will be distributed in 45 units in 18 States east of the Great Plains. Additions to existing units will be made as follows:

Pisgah National Forest, 348,000 acres in North Carolina; Unaka National Forest, 878,000 acres in Tennessee and North Carolina; Cherokee National Forest, 932,000 acres in Tennessee, Georgia and North Carolina; Nantahala National Forest, 411,000 acres in North Carolina and Georgia.

Convicts Await Supreme Test In Serum Fight

Colorado Prisoners Stoical in Tuberculosis Cure Battle.

Canon City, Colo., May 13 (AP).—Two convicts in the State prison who offered their bodies as testing grounds for science confronted today the most crucial part of the experiment.

Already two injections of a serum which scientists believe may supply a preventive for tuberculosis have been shot into the arms of Carl Erickson, 62, and Mike Schmidt, 53, life termers.

The next move in the tests will be to shoot millions of tuberculosis bacilli into the prisoners' veins. Although penitentiary officials and the scientists declined to say when this will be done, it is expected this step will be taken next week.

Both prisoners, as well as others who will take the tests later, have been promised executive clemency.

Whether they will leave the prison as healthy men or tuberculosis-ridden sufferers will depend on the efficacy of the serum devised by Dr. H. J. Corper and his associates in the laboratories of the National Jewish Hospital in Denver.

Dr. Corper said the serum, when tried on animals, was found effective as a protection against tuberculosis. Dr. Corper is supervising the experiments at the prison.

Prison officials said both Erickson and Schmidt are stoical about the operations.

"It isn't so bad so far and I haven't felt a bit different since the serum shots were given than I did before," Erickson said.

"I have worked every day in the blacksmith shop and some of that work is hard, but it hasn't affected my strength."

Police Extend Time of Gettle Kidnap Truce

Family of Missing Man Believed Negotiating With Abductors.

Los Angeles, May 13 (AP).—At the personal request of Mrs. Fleta Gettle, wife of William F. Gettle, kidnaped Beverly Hills millionaire, law enforcement officers postponed tonight until tomorow at 6 p. m. the end of their "truce" with the kidnapers.

The appeal of Mrs. Gettle was construed by authorities to mean that the family was dealing directly with the kidnapers and were negotiating for the payment of the $75,000 ransom demanded.

Police, deputy sheriffs and Department of Justice men had planned the concentration of 5,000 officers in southern California at midnight to begin one of the most widespread searches in the history of this area.

"We will keep hands off until tomorrow at 6 p. m.," said District Attorney Buron Fitts. "Our first concern is the welfare of Mr. Gettle. After he is returned to his family we can begin our work."

All law enforcement officers had been standing aside to allow Ernest E. Noon, attorney and the family's intermediary, and the family to conduct negotiations for Gettle's release.

Last night the heads of the police, sheriff and Justice Departments issued an ultimatum to the kidnapers to produce Gettle by midnight of suffer the consequences. They said they were prepared to conduct a house-to-house canvass in Los Angeles.

The unexpected request of Mrs. Gettle for more time was taken by the authorities to mean that negotiations were under way for Gettle's release within the next 24 hours.

Noon, who was in conference with the family earlier in the day, said he would have "a very important announcement to make shortly."

Sheet of Washington's Paper, Relics Given Mount Vernon

Thanks to Washington Perine, who is a great-great-great-nephew of George Washington, Mount Vernon has been enriched by a sheet of the general's paper, a wax relief portrait of himself and a letter written by his half-nephew, William Augustine Washington, to Thomas Beall.

The new accessions were announced yesterday by the Mount Vernon Ladies Association, which is holding its annual meeting on the historic Potomac River estate. They are among a number of relics which will be placed on display as gifts or loans.

The sheet of paper, with water mark, is believed to be the only whole sheet of its kind in existence. The wax portrait was a family heirloom 112 years.

A chair, made in 1789, is a gift from Mrs. Adolph Boissevaine, of New York. In excellent condition, with its arms supported by gilded eagles, the chair came from the house where Washington lived when in Philadelphia.

From Miss Frances Lehr, of Baltimore, comes a portrait of Nelly Custis, supposed to be in her wedding gown. A sugar bowl originally owned by Martha Washington was presented by Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer, vice regent for Massachusetts.

An inkstand which Gen. Washington gave Capt. Francis Conway was presented to the ladies association by the captain's grandnieces, Mary Louise Battaile Ayres and Estelle Conway Battaile, of Pungoteague, Va.

Mrs. Lawrence Washington, daughter-in-law of John Augustine Washington, the last private owner of Mount Vernon, lent a portrait of Lawrence Washington, half brother of Washington, and his commission as captain in the Virginia forces.

An inlaid applique bedspread was received from Mrs. James Pilling and the Yale Museum has made the permanent loan of a large Sheffield teaboard, with the Washington arms. Mrs. Henry Bartol, of New York, presented a letter from Gen. Washington to Mrs. Robert Morris.

Prof. Morley J. Williams, of Harvard University, has contributed to the association library a book entitled "Boswell on Watering Meadows." Prof. Williams, who is completing a survey of Mount Vernon which he started in 1931, attended the association's sessions Saturday.

Cotton Eases After Gaining Early in Week

Domestic Use Increases to 520,000 Bales; Spot Sales Cut.

New York, May 13 (AP).—After advancing during the earlier part of the week on reported prospects for silver legislation which evidently strengthened inflationary sentiment, cotton eased partially under liquidation and scattered selling.

Offerings were absorbed on moderate reactions and the market firmed up again following a sharp advance in wheat. After selling off from 11.49 to 11.22, July advanced to 11.45 during Thursday's trading, but an easier turn in wheat, reports of fairly favorable weather in the South and continued talk of domestic curtailment led to a renewal of scattering liquidation during Friday's trading. July closed at 11.28 tonight, compared with 11.18 at the close of the previous week.

With the attention of the trade more or less absorbed by Washington uncertainties, there was comparatively little comment on the coming crop outlook.

Two private reports on acreage prospects have been issued. One of them pointing to planting intentions of 27,500,000 acres while the other estimated the outlook at about 30,320,000. These figures attracted little comment with the trade evidently awaiting developments.

According to the New York Cotton Exchange Service domestic consumption for April amounted to 520,000 bales compared with 470,000 last year. These figures were quite up to expectations but ideas of consumption during the balance of the season are being revised downward owing to the talk of possible domestic mill curtailment. There has been some New Orleans and scattered Southern selling here during the week, but while demand is reported slow, offering of spot cotton in the interior are said to be very light and the basis remains firm.

2,000 Homeless In Portugal Storm

Hail Sweeps From Peaks; Many Injured.

Lisbon, Portugal, May 13 (AP).—A terrific rain and hail storm swept down the eastern side of the Serra da Estrella, Portugal's highest mountain ridge, last night, leaving 2,000 persons homeless in peasant villages.

Many peasants were reported seriously injured, but crippled communications prevented compilation of a casualty list.

Reports to government officials, who rushed assistance, were that many of the refugees were without food and that many were on the verge of complete exhaustion after their night-long struggle to escape the avalanches which poured down the mountain slope.

Developments of Last Week Indicate That NRA Must Eliminate Its Past Errors if It Is to Save Its Good Features.

By Ralph West Robey.

For some time it has been a common saying among critics of the NRA that it either must crack-down or crack-up. During the last week the trend quite definitely has been in the direction of cracking-up. Evidence of this has come from both within and without the organization. The NRA, to a degree that at no time has been true of any other "recovery" organization, is in retreat. Unless the current trend is changed it will be a question merely of what can be salvaged from this attempt at Nation-wide regulation and regimentation.

That there are some aspects of the plan that should be salvaged seems to be beyond question. In many directions the organization has performed a valuable service for society. It has eliminated, to a large extent, the sweatshops that for generations were a black spot in various parts of our business structure; it has established certain minimum working conditions with which a company must comply if it is to exist; and it has brought at least some degree of order out of the chaos that prevailed in some of our industries. These have been major contributions, and contributions all the more remarkable because of the short time in which they have been realized.

Reforms Accompanied By Needless Policies.

Along with these improvements, however, have gone various policies that tended to weaken the business structure, and thereby to retard lasting recovery. Outstanding in this particular have been price fixing, production control and extension of codes to lines of activity that do not lend themselves to, and can not without the greatest difficulty be subjected to, such regulation.

From the first two of these, price fixing and production control, has resulted the tendency toward monopoly that has been so evident under various codes. They also are largely responsible for placing small business units under a severe handicap. Finally, to them must be credited a substantial share of the public opposition that has developed against NRA for it has been in those industries that have production control and or price fixing that we have had the most spectacular price increases.

From the extension of codes to businesses that do not lend themselves to such regulation have come the greatest problems of enforcement and such silly episodes as jailing a tailor because he charged a nickel less than he was supposed to for pressing a suit. Needless to say a growing public resentment has followed the publication of these petty enforcement problems.

Overhauling of NRA a Difficult Task.

It is one thing, nevertheless, to divide the NRA into its good and bad features and quite a different thing to reform the organization with a view of keeping the good and eliminating the bad. This is because out of production control and price fixing has developed a situation that to a large extent is artificial. If these provisions in the codes are removed such artificiality will collapse. This means, on one side, lower prices, and on the other side, at least temporarily, reduced employment. At the same time if an attempt is made to hold prices up through continuing these provisions in the codes, these parts of the economic system will remain out of line with the rest of the business structure and consequently will keep recovery under a strain.

It is because of such problems as these that there is a real question whether even the good features of the NRA can be saved. This will involve much of what to the public will apepar as a cracking-up of the NRA, but in the long run we will be much better off if such a course is pursued than if we try to validate past errors through a policy of cracking-down.

Curb's Prices Suffer Under Selling Drives

Utilities Resist Losses as Week Closes; Sales Up to 250,000 Shares.

New York, May 13 (AP).—Selling again predominated in last week's curb market trading. Major declines were suffered by industrial shares, but utilities were rather resistant, particularly late in the week.

Metals yielded in the sharp selling drive Monday, presumably due to developments concerning silver legislation. Later, however, mining shares displayed a steadier tone.

Oils followed a comparatively narrow range. Gulf Oil yielded moderately, but Standard Oil of Indiana and International Petroleum were little changed. Among alcohols, Hiram Walker encountered substantial selling at times.

The initial unsettlement was followed by improved tendencies around mid-week, but an active flurry of selling again forced the list downward on Thursday, with sizeable losses in the specialty list.

Sharp declines were suffered by Aluminum Company of America, Dow Chemical, Natomas Company, Montgomery Ward A, Murphy Company and General Tire & Rubber. Electric Bond & Share held up well near the end.

Transfers averaged around 250,000 shares for each full session compared with around 200,000 for the previous week.

Stocks Break To New Lows As Week Ends

Selling Rush Is Laid to Liquidation of Long Holdings.

New York, May 13 (AP).—The securities markets plowed through the third week of almost steadily declining prices this week.

The stock market found but passing comfort in the rise in the wheat market, however, since despite the higher prices, it appeared that the drought had become so severe that aggregate rural purchasing power may have been impaired. Wall street also concluded that whatever compromise were reached on silver would not prove to be particularly inflationary.

Stocks broke finally to new lows, as measured by price averages, since December.

Short selling was also said to be more active, but Wall street opinion was that the dominant factor was real liquidation of long holdings of stock.

Some disappointment was manifest that the spring rise in business had not reached higher levels before the evidences of seasonal tapering off had started to appear. Steel production continued to expand, Iron Age placing operations at 60 per cent of capacity for the first time since 1930. Steel scrap prices weakened, however, and much of the production appeared to be for inventory, which led some analysts to look for a substantial letdown in July, when it will no longer be possible to specify against old contracts at the lower prices. This seemed to prompt considerable selling in the steel shares.

Motors were also reactionary. Retail sales of automobiles were said to have improved a little, along with a pick-up in retail trade generally, as warmer weather appeared over much of the country, but automobile production declined substantially for the second successive week, which Cram's automotive reports regarded as "increasing evidence that the industry's peak operating levels for the year have passed."

1,175 U. S. Road Jobs Completed

$35,854,000 Is Expected by PWA, Says Ickes.

Work has been completed on 1,175 of the Public Works Administration-Federal aid highway projects financed under the $400,000,000 PWA grant, Secretary of the Interior Ickes announced yesterday.

Maryland and New Hampshire are the only States in which no projects have been completed, the Secretary said. The District of Columbia program was listed as 100 per cent complete.

The road jobs completed represented an estimated total cost of $35,854,000. A total of 7,573 jobs, estimated to cost $373,104,000, have been advertised for contract, begun by day labor or have been finished. On May 5 there were 165,382 men receiving regular direct employment.

WE WANT it understood right here and now that nothing in the following account is to be construed as comment, favorable or unfavorable, on the action of the N. B. C. bosses.

We are here to report, not to judge, and when we tell you that what we have to report is that Arthur Reilly, the same who is known as the Globe Trotter, yesterday was elected by the bosses to take over the presidency of the WMAL Breakfast Club, effective today, you may appreciate our caution.

Yes, it is Arthur vs. Arthur in an N. B. C.-C. B. S. sunrise broadcast war that has seen, in the last few months, a succession of Breakfast Club presidents that suggests nothing so much as a Central American revolution.

For the nonce, Sidney Ten Eyck is the sufferer, and if we read the signs aright Sidney's suffering will include, ere long, not only the loss of his office, but his job. But that's another, sadder story.

Yes, it's Arthur vs. Arthur fighting a morning war with weapons as different as the seasons. Godfrey has humor—for want of a better classification—and Reilly has—and here a category eludes us completely, for with what does a new commentator fight a radio war? A soft voice? A poem or two? A story?

Don't ask us. Don't ask anyone. All we know is that recently N. B. C. announced three times that a picture of Reilly could be had for the writing and received, very quickly, some 1,800 replies. And if a guy can do that with soft-spoken news comments, what is to prevent him from getting his 11 p. m. following up at 7 a. m.?

WE still cling to the belief that the mean quotient of intelligence for the race lies somewhere between 6 and the point at which most, if not all, of the educators who had anything to do with our larnin' often wished it were.

Whenever we feel the fondness of our faith may merely be blindness, we think of Jack Benny and why the Nation's radio editors voted him the air's No. 1 comic. We try to forget all about the Joe Penners, the Ed Wynns, &c.

And now we've got in a spot for explaining our climbing on the Benny bandwagon. Quite frankly, we never fully understood it ourself, so perhaps it would be better if we quoted a piece from one of the press blurbs Benny's sponsor has sent us, inasmuch as they were responsible for our getting this way in the first place.

"Benny's 'gags' are given airings here in the newspaper office following each broadcast, and I have noted that social circles usually swing to the Benny subject whenever radio presentations are mentioned."

If Edna M. Kennell, radio editor of the Rochester Times-Union, who probably pinch hits in the society whose singing accent is said to be Turkish, lately has been added to the staff of Jack Benny & Co. on N. B. C. Friday nights.

department once in a while, means that Benny's brand of humor strikes out in all directions, hitting high and low, we agree, though we'd much prefer to write a letter asking her what she thinks a newspaper office is, anyway.

We see no reason for the Fire Chief and the Baker going Benny or anything else. But we do suggest for Wynn a new joke library and for Penner another duck.

BLACKIE BEAR

Grandpa Dodges Death

"Well, as I was telling you last night," said Grandpa Bear, when Bettie had finished with her supper things and had settled down in her rocking chair in the corner, "I did a lot of fishing out in my country, but I didn't have to go to all the trouble with poles and lines and bait, like Blackie does. As I told you, I just sat by a little pool in the creek till some trout came jumping up to catch flies, or to jump from one pool to another and I would slap them out on the rocks.

"So one day when I had caught about a dozen of the finest trout you ever saw, and had them all piled up on a rock, along came a bad man with a gun and when he was climbing down the mountain near the stream, he saw my fishes and he wanted them so much that he decided to kill me and take them home with him. He knocked a rock over and it came tumbling down the mountain and made me look up just in time to see him raise his gun to shoot me.

"Well, he shot all right, but your Granddaddy jumped behind a rock before the shot reached him. And about that time your Granddaddy decided that he didn't care much for a fish dinner that day and so he left his fishes for that bad man with the gun.

"Yes, your old man has been more than half dead a lot of times, but he isn't so old nor so near dead, but what he has a few fights in him yet, and he may show you young bucks something before the winter is gone. I may even be able to show a friend of mine how to catch a turtle most as big as Hee-Haw.

"Dr. Coon was always wanting to know something, and so he asked Grandpa Bear how he ever happened to leave that good fishing country and come over here.

"Oh, well, that's another story," said Grandpa Bear, "and I'll have to tell you that another time. Right now I have got to go to work on some plans to keep you boys from getting lonesome. I don't want you to think there isn't any more marrow in the bones of Grandpa Bear.

No, I don't think I will sleep all this winter. There's too much fun lying around loose, and I think I am going to pick up some of it."

Last Survivor of Lee's Staff Observes His 96th Birthday

Williamsburg, Va., May 13 (AP).—Maj. Giles Buckner Cooke, the last survivor of th estaff of Robert E. Lee, general of the Confederate army, observed his ninety-sixth birthday in Williamsburg today.

A special guest at morning services at historic Bruton Parish Church, Maj. Cooke—a chaplain in the army of the Confederacy, pronounced the benediction.

He later returned to his home at Mathews Court House. Maj. Cooke's great-grandfather, the Rev. John Bracken, was for many years president of William and Mary College.

Maj. Cooke has long made it his practice to go to Williamsburg on his birthday eve and spend the night in the house built by his ancestor.

The house is one of the monuments of Colonial Williamsburg recently restored through the efforts of the Rockefeller Foundation.

The mayor of referred to Gen. Lee as once "who, in the dark days directly after the war, gave his time to the teaching of the young people of the South and urged them to disseminate the truth and to correct error wherever found."

A member of a well-known Virginia family, Maj. Cooke was born in Portsmouth, May 13, 1838, and graduated from Virginia Military Institute in 1850. He studied law for several years before the outbreak of hostilities between the North and South.

He volunteered at the opening of the war and was appointed to the staff of Gen. Phillip St. George Cooke as a first lieutenant. After several transfers he was appointed to the staff of Gen. Lee in 1864 as assistant adjutant and inspector general, with the rank of general.

He was wounded near Appomattox, but was present at the surrender with other members of the staff when the Southern forces laid down their arms.

Maj. Cooke entered the Episcopal ministry after the war. From 1904 to 1915 he was rector of Kingston Parish Church, Mathews County, where he retired.

Maj. Cooke, despite his 96 years, remains healthy and vigorous, members of his family say.

Maryland Tercentary Coin Bill Signed at White House

Baltimore, May 13 (Spl.).—President Roosevelt signed the Goldsborough-Tydings Maryland Tercentenary commemorative coin bill yesterday, Tercentenerary Commission officials learned here today.

Passed by the Senate April 24, and rushed through the house after brief hearings before the Coinage, Weights and Measures Committee, before which Tercentenary Commission officials explained its purposes, the bill authorizes coinage of 25,000 50-cent silver coins to memorialize the founding of Maryland in 1634.

The bill passed by the Senate provided for the coinage of 10,000 coins. Treasury officials, however, suggested that the number be increased to 25,000 because numismatists might purchase a large number of the smaller quanity and force up the price. The change was agreed upon.

Vanguard of Fleet Arrives at Norfolk

Annapolis Midshipmen to Cruise on Wyoming.

Norfolk, Va., May 13 (Spl.).—A large number of Navy enlisted men were in Norfolk today, most of them from the battleship Wyoming, which is berthed in pier 2 at the naval base.

Others were from the battleship Idaho, undergoing modernization at the Navy Yard, and from the naval base. The Wyoming is to remain here until May 21 or 23, when she will proceed to Annapolis to take aboard members of the first and third classes of the midshipment of the Naval Academy. The cruiser Portland is due Wednesday from Cuba. She will spend one day here and proceed to Dahlgren to test her guns at the Navy Proving Grounds. Next Sunday will see the arrival of the battleship Arkansas, which will join the Wyoming on the midshipmen's cruise.

Thousands of tons of stores and provisions are at the naval base awaiting the arrival of the fleet on the East Coast. Ships will be detailed to deliver supplies to the fleet while in New York and New England waters. They also will transport supplies to Cuba, to be picked up there next fall when the fleet starts back to the Pacific.

"SHOPPING...THERE'S A REAL TEST OF NERVES, TOO, MR. BUCK!"

Listen to what Mrs. Abbot J. Copeland has to say on shopping—and nerves:

"There's no doubt in the world that healthy nerves are vital to a man who goes out and catches wild animals alive. But take it from a busy wife and mother who spends many hours each week searching through the stores—anxious to make the family budget reach as far as possible—you need healthy nerves to be a shopper, too! Tramping through miles and miles of aisles...pricing, comparing, judging quality and values...well, that's a test of anyone's nerves. 'Nerves' don't ever bother me, though. As for cigarettes, I smoke Camels. They don't upset my nerves. And I have never tasted such flavor and mildness."

Frank Buck, who has brought back many tons of wild cargo from the jungles of Asia, says:

"It takes healthy nerves to bring 'em back alive. It's a job packed with thrills, excitement, and real danger. I never would have been able to populate half the zoos in this country, cross the Pacific 20 times with tons of savage live cargo, and save my own life a half dozen times by quick action if I didn't have healthy nerves. I am a heavy smoker. I prefer Camels, knowing that I can safely smoke all I want without upsetting my nerves."

How Are YOUR Nerves?

Jangled nerves are apt to visit us all. You know the signs—telephone slamming, frowning, hot words that wound others, worrying and fuming over trifles.

If you are inclined toward jumpy nerves check up now—on your eating and sleeping, your habits of work and play. Make Camels your cigarette. They never get on your nerves.

If you have experienced the aftertaste often associated with flat-tasting cigarettes, or the "sweet" type, you will appreciate the mildness and rich flavor of Camels. And you can smoke them all you want. For Camel's costlier tobaccos never jangle your nerves.

A Lesson From Takoma.

Washington taxicab drivers who cross the line into Maryland are being arrested. So long as they remain within the District they are able to serve the public as common carriers without making any provision whatever to pay damages for accidents they may cause. But when cabs operating without liability insurance attempt to carry on their business in the suburbs beyond the Maryland line they are considered a menace to the community.

Coming at a time when the compulsory insurance bill covering taxicabs is before Congress, the arrests at Takoma Park serve as a pointed illustration of the laxity of our local regulations. In the Capital City taxicab drivers need not be financially responsible; in the suburbs, where traffic hazards are fewer, they must assume the obligations that common sense imputes to all public agencies of transportation. Yet a few stubborn Congressmen are blocking the measure that would tend to make taxis in Washington as safe as those operating in the suburbs.

Enforcement of the Maryland statute is not designed to work a hardship on cab drivers from Washington, but to protect the public and the transportation agencies of that State. Since Maryland cab drivers are required to establish financial responsibility, it would be obviously unfair to permit uninsured Washington drivers to compete with them. Moreover, the purpose of the statute—to protect the public against reckless and irresponsible drivers—can not be fully carried out unless it is enforced without discrimination.

Puerile arguments by Congressmen who seem to be more concerned with low taxi fares than with safety should not be permitted to defeat the compulsory insurance bill. With the accident rate in Washington mounting rapidly, compulsory insurance for the drivers of private cars who fail to satisfy judgments growing out of traffic accidents ought to be considered. Congress seems disposed to study this measure further, but certainly there is no excuse for delay on the bill relating to taxicabs.

Dr. Dennett and Williams.

Williams College is not one of the largest educational institutions in this country, but up in the Berkshire Mountains it has long stood for "intelligent liberalism in education, scholarship and common sense." Under the 26-year reign of Dr. Harry A. Garfield, the high standards of the college were excellently upheld, and the Williamstown School of Politics became famous as the gathering place of political intellectuals from all over the world.

The trustees of Williams could have chosen far less wisely than they did when they selected for president Dr. Tyler Dennett, who moved from comparative obscurity to the front pages last week when he was awarded the Pulitzer prize for his biography of John Hay. Dr. Dennett is a Westerner by birth, an Easterner by education and an internationalist by choice. As an authority on Far Eastern affairs he has lectured at Johns Hopkins, Columbia and Princeton. For several years he was with the State Department in Washington in various important editorial and advisory capacities. His interest in the department, the Far East and the United States led to his biography of Hay, who was Secretary of State under McKinley and Roosevelt and who was responsible for the declaration of the open door policy in China.

But what is really significant in his selection as a college president, it seems, is that Williams has named as its head neither a business man nor a professional educator. It has reverted to the old tradition of selecting a scholar, rather than one whose primary energies would be devoted to the raising of funds for stadia or to teaching as a profession. If this is old-fashioned New England conservatism, it is also common sense and liberalism in the best use of the word.

"Blind Buyers."

Addressing the Consumers' League of Cleveland, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Tugwell said that the 30,000,000 families who spend 60 per cent of the National income over retail counters "all too often do not know what they are buying." Mr. Tugwell thinks that the "time has come for consumers to organize if they are ever going to." In his opinion, "they can still exert some pressure through the market, but also they can influence governmental policies." This advice is sound, provided certain reservations are attached. It ought not to be forgotten, however, that a grave responsibility rests upon those who undertake to guide consumer buying. Standardization and grading of products under Government supervision, to protect consumers against exploitation, are essential, and much more needs to be done along this line. But the suggestion that consumers should organize to "exert pressure through the markets" has an ominous sound.

The average consumer is not competent to judge either the quality of the goods he buys or the fairness of the prices charged, because of the intricacies of the modern price-making process and the variety of articles offered for sale. Consequently organized consumer groups are capable of inflicting great and undeserved damage upon blameless merchants by heeding the advice of ill-informed or prejudiced persons who set themselves up as expert judges. There is an ever-present danger that protective consumer organizations may be converted into boycotting agencies by ignorant or zealous injunctions not to patronize this or that concern on the ground that it deals unfairly.

Sprinting For Adjournment.

Congress always becomes fidgety with the approach of summer in election years. As the political caldrons "back home" begin to steam up members of both the House and Senate are inclined to drop their labors in Washington and take up the much more pleasant task of formulating new pledges to the electorate. This year is no exception. In spite of the fact that Congress is still confronted by a rather heavy legislative program, the drive for adjournment has begun.

It is difficult to find any logic in speeding up the legislative machinery in May because elections will be held in November. Primary elections are being conducted in some States, but these ought not to disrupt the work of Congress. Administration leaders would be in a very embarrassing position if they should desert the so-called recovery front in Washington for the political front out on the hustings before the legislative program is properly completed.

Representative Byrns, Democratic leader in the House, says that body will be "packed up and ready to go home" by May 25. In other words, he believes that the House can complete its work in about 10 legislative days. Yet there are seven major bills on its calendar, and at least two more which ought to be considered. In addition several important measures now in conference must go before the House for further action. Apparently the House leaders are ready to dispose of one or more major problems per day so that Congressmen may add a few additional days or weeks to the five months they will have for electioneering.

In the Senate the calendar is more congested. Approval of ten important measures, some of them very intricate and controversial, is sought by the Administration. These include the bill to create a communications commission, the commodity exchange regulation bill, a measure extending intermediate credit to industry, the reciprocal tariff bill, the emergency housing plan, extension of the temporary bank deposit guarantee, a bill to tighten the grip of the AAA on agriculture, the District appropriations bill, the proposed addition of $1,322,000,000 to the President's emergency fund, and confirmation of Dr. Tugwell as Undersecretary of Agriculture.

Virtually all of these measures demand thoughtful and extensive consideration. In discussing the Smith amendments to the agricultural adjustment act, for example, the whole trend of the experiment in crop reduction might well be scrutinized. Hasty action on such a vital issue would amount to a dereliction of duty. Moreover, a number of important bills are in danger of being lost if this spurt for early adjournment continues. Among them is the Wagner-Lewis plan for unemployment insurance. Quite a number of local measures may be sacrificed to the mania for five-month campaigns.

One of the strongest arguments used to bring about adoption of the so-called "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution was that it would eliminate the short sessions of Congress in which a great deal of hasty and ill-considered legislation was passed. It would be ironical indeed if the devotion of Congressmen to politics should perpetuate the abuses of the former short sessions. Of course, no one would urge Congress to remain in Washington after its work has been done. But the practice of railroading through intricate bills and turning over to the Executive problems that should be solved by scrupulous legislative action—so that Congressmen may devote more time to politics—is a sad commentary upon our legislative branch of government.

The Living Age.

Ninety years is old whether it is the age of a man or a magazine. But ninety years, in history's span, is a brief period of time. It was in 1844 that Eliakim Littell, of Boston, founded The Living Age, which was a compendium of the best thought from across the waters on all sorts of subjects, political, literary, artistic and fashionable. Since then the magazine has changed format, but, with the exception of a few numbers, it has always maintained its original policy. It is celebrating its ninetieth birthday with a special number which is made more interesting by the inclusion of reprints from its old pages.

Some of these reprints suggest that human nature does not change much; others could be used as proof that human standards change a great deal. There are two letters of advice to young people that would not be read beyond the first sentence, except for amusement, by young people today. Were they taken seriously 60, 70 years ago?

Reading these excerpts from the files of the past makes one want to moralize upon the evolution of ideas, until one realizes the futility of doing so. It was, after all, another world when Eliakim Littell began pasting up the English exchanges. Texas had not become part of the United States; the Civil War was yet to be fought. People had different ideas, led different lives than they do now. But they realized that civilization would not remain as they knew it. They saw that a "rapid progress of change" was going on, and the world was coming to "a new state of things which the merely political prophet can not compute or foresee."

It is, of course, a mistake to assume that sweeping alterations or upheavals are peculiar to our own age. History is always dynamic in the making. Sometimes the flow of events is smoother than it appears to be today, yet we are inclined to forget the momentous issues of the past or to minimize them in comparison with current difficulties. This attitude is no less a delusion than is the belief that current experiments can iron out all of the rough spots of future decades.

The Wheat Conference Fails.

The international wheat conference has collapsed, because Argentina has refused to agree to minimum prices for export wheat, and is demanding an increase in the export quota assigned her under the agreement reached last August. Secretary Wallace, who is "exceedingly disappointed" by the failure of the conference, warns the wheat growing nations that if an agreement is not reached, this country may abandon its domestic control plan and engage in a competitive contest in world wheat markets.

"With the mechanism of the AAA," he says, "it would be possible for the United States to meet with its surplus wheat any kind of competition that might be established by other nations, and at the same time aid the cooperating growers to get comparative prices for the domestically consumed portion of the crop."

Mr. Wallace speaks lightly, almost casually, of this alternative. His warnings probably will not be taken very seriously by countries selling wheat at prices far below those now prevailing in American markets. The North Pacific Emergency Export Association reports that the average differential between domestic and world prices on approximately 25,000,000 bushels of wheat which it has sold for export amounted to about 23 cents per bushel. The cost of such subsidized exporting has been met by allocating for this purpose 2 cents per bushel out of the 30-cent processing tax on the milling of wheat.

It is evident, therefore, that our domestic price-raising policy is incompatible with the maintenance of an export market for wheat, unless the Government is prepared to offer substantial export bonuses for every bushel shipped abroad. If "dumping" of wheat should be undertaken on the extensive scale suggested by Secretary Wallace, importing countries would increase their tariffs, impose more stringent quotas, or in various ways neutralize the effect of the subsidies paid to American growers. We should not only be adding to the burdens of our taxpayers, but we should be encouraging an expansion of the wheat area and further overproduction.

During each of the last six years world wheat supplies have greatly exceeded world requirements. With wheat importing countries adding constantly to restrictions upon imports and stimulating domestic production, with consumption reduced by prolonged depression, and with heavy carryovers from previous years, it was evident that a mere agreement to control exports and to stabilize prices would not solve the wheat problem. Dependence must be placed upon slow processes of adjustment. So far as the United States is concerned, nature is helping to reduce the amount of our available export surplus. But so long as we follow the present price raising program, nothing but subsidies will enable us to sell our wheat in world markets.

Presto!

Representative Somers' suggestion that Congressmen be put in uniform is not without its good points, although it might have been more desirable a few months ago before opposition to the New Deal became as pronounced as it is now. Just what the design of the uniform should be is not easy to visualize. There have been times when a conical hat of white paper would have met with approval. A good many other designs might be suggested. Perhaps if the Congressman could be made for a while to wear the uniform the cartoonists have bestowed upon the taxpayer—the barrel, and nothing else—some good might be accomplished.

Even more interesting is Mr. Somers' suggestion regarding the coinage of a 3-cent piece made out of magnesium. Such coins would be light, he says, and would not wear out one's pockets. Solicitude on the part of a Congressman for the public pocket is in itself a novelty. But Mr. Somers goes further than that. His secondary purpose in recommending magnesium 3-cent pieces is medicinal. "If you have acidosis," he says, "you could place the magnesium in your mouth, and presto! No more acidosis."

It appears, however, that he has brought forth this magic a little too late. A year ago the Administration told the country that a slice could be cut from the dollar and presto! there would be no more depression. The public is skeptical now.

No, sir; spring or no spring, we're not going to putter around in a garden. Just look what happened to Adam.

The Eskimo language consists of an extremely limited number of words, we read. But, then, very little happens to an Eskimo worth talking about, anyway.

Smokers' Rights.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The little controversy on cigarettes, smokers' rights, &c., reminds me of a stanza by James Walton, which might be of interest:

"I have walked in summer meadows, where the sunbeams flashed and broke,
But I never saw the cattle nor the sheep nor horses smoke;
I have watched the birds with wonder when the grass with dew was wet,
But I never saw a robin puffing at a cigarette.
I have fished in many a river where the sucker crop was ripe,
But I never saw a catfish puffing at a briar pipe.
Man's the only living creature that pervades this vale of tears,
Like a blooming traction engine puffing smoke from nose and ears;
If Dame Nature had intended when she first invented man
That he'd smoke, she'd have built him on a widely different plan.
She'd have fixed him with a stovepipe and a damper and a grate,
And she'd had a smoke consumer that was strictly up to date."

Surely it's a free country, but why shouldn't the smoking man or woman, if he or she sees that some nonsmoker is forced by circumstances to breathe the foul smoke, show just a little human kindness and consideration, especially to women and children?

However, no argument is ever settled by verbal retaliation and cutting scarcasm. You have your rights, I have mine. Let's respect the other fellow's rights as far as possible and be at peace with all men. CHEERY CHARLEY.

Washington, May 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your correspondent, M. E. H. (the one who thought my letter was "very funny"), makes it necessary for me to explain that I was referring to a theater in another country, where I was nauseated by being forced to inhale tobacco smoke. However, one need only remain in the lobbies of Constitution Hall during intermission, and receive the same effect—of being saturated with tobacco smoke—that is achieved in other places where this "vile indulgence" (I quote your correspondent) is permitted.

In any case, why evade the point at issue? M. E. H. knows as well as I do that my claim to the right to breathe pure air is justifiable. And I do not dispute his right to smoke; I only ask him not make me smoke with him.

Kindly inform M. E. H. that Miss Shaw has lived on three continents, and knows what she is writing about when she refers to the disgusting experience of being forced to indulge in a second-hand smoke.

MURIEL SHAW.

Washington, May 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I ask M. E. H. when the two certain movie houses, one on Fifteenth street and the other on Columbia road were condemned as movie houses of the very poorest class? I should like to know, for the reason that when I went in those places I was under the impression that I was entering fairly decent theaters. I sat in the balconies and had smoke blown into my face.

May I say, M. E. H., that I know from personal experience that air laden with tobacco smoke can cause considerable trouble to the mucous membranes of some persons, and that this trouble may turn into cataarh of such membranes or a sort of chronic hay fever. Pleasant—so what?

J. E. N.

Washington, May 8.

Wrote Sarcastic.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Do I read rightly? The Cherry Blossom festival, plus the military and commercial addenda to the parade, netted some $30,000 to $40,000, and filled all hotels, rooming houses and parking places despite the rainy season. Then why not a Dandelion festival? Let's hurry! Put the unemployed on the Capitol green, White House lawn, &c., armed with sharp knives and market baskets and have them—the unemployed of course—dig out the golden blooms.

Don't forget to notify the sound pictures, newspaper rotogravures, country cousins, &c. Have the "ladies in cheese cloth" produce one of their famous hopping adagios, and the village choir might attempt some sort of a dandelion masque with incidental music. Don't forget the parade, (Marine Band, Army mounted troops, trade store floats, peanut venders, auto superplus exhibits, &c.

And, oh yes, to encourage the unemployed as they dig the golden blooms for the newsreel, why not have Elder Michaux's wonderful singers carol, croon or yodel "Happy Am I?" Our First Lady might represent the Administration in a short radio boardcast. Perhaps some of our Congressmen's wives might have a new dandelion frock to exhibit. Then let one broadcast a NRA (Not Responsible Anyhow) recipe for real, real dandelion wine!

There's gold in these here festivals! Would we could have the whole thing up North to dear old Boston. We could throw a couple of ultra-aura-tinted cults in, and, allezoop! Cherry blossom receipts would seem immaterial!

THE PROFANE POET.

Washington, May 5.

Faith in American People.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have faith that the inherent common sense of the American people will always prevail in any serious crisis.

I have faith that the organized brains of the American people will solve the country's difficult problems.

I have faith that the sense of justice of the American people will establish right relations between capital and labor, so that all will honorably fulfill their mutual obligations.

I have faith that the sense of humor of the American people will protect them against spurious schemes, shibboleths, and slogans.

I have faith that the inherent independence of the American people will always insure to this country freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and religious liberty.

I have faith that the persistence and thoroughness of the American people will ultimately rid this country of anarchists, infidels, traitors, mischief-makers and lawbreakers of every kind.

I have faith that the Christian spirit of the American people will cause them to look more and more to God for guidance, to keep Christ enthroned as the standard of human perfection, and to labor diligently for universal peace and harmony.

Out of the turmoil of social and economic upheaval will come a better day for all classes of pepole, a clearer vision of life's possibilities, and still greater opportunities for useful and unselfish service.

GRENVILLE KLEISER.

New York City, May 9.

Insanitary Living Conditions.

To the Editor of The Post: Sir—Most of the men living here are employed at the Government Experimental Stations, and they must live very near the farm in order to hold their jobs. Most of them receive low pay—yet, even so, they must pay from a fourth to half their wages for rent. In almost any other country town they could, for the same amount of money, live decently. Here, for $20 to $25, they receive only a shell of a house, often one in which plaster and wall paper are both missing, and in which electricity is the only convenience.

In one section of the town the renters are cautioned not to use their wells for drinking purposes, because they contain typhoid fever germs. In the section where the renters can not use their wells, water must be fetched from a very sanitary (?) spring located beside a much used highway.

At the farms, where these men work, are found the most sanitary conditions. Why can't the men caring for these animals have the same decent living conditions? And why can't the man who pays his rent demand at least a house in which the plaster does not fall from the walls, and in which there is at least a clean water supply?

Many industrial employers take a keen interest in the living conditions of their employes—often to the extent of furnishing, at a minimum rental, houses which are modern and comfortable. Why can't the Government do the same? It is investigating living conditions in other sections of the country. This is quite close to home, and it seems as though some one ought to do something for these people, without delay. A. J. SHANE.

Beltsville, Md., May 9.

Spanish Custom

An old Spanish custom was able to render a more obvious service to mankind than usual Wednesday when a former toreador in Madrid slew a bull which had gone berserk in the Central Market there. El toro, escaping from a slaughter-house early in the morning, proceeded to comment editorially on man's craze for beefsteak by charging amain various public stores of garlic, cabbages, beans and potatoes, set out thoughtfully against the morning trade.

As it happened, Antonio Sanchez, fortified perhaps with Malaga and mellow memories of his former pomp and circumstance as a Madrid bull-fighter, was wending his way home. He saw the bull, whose tossing horns, enwreathed all with cress and produce of the field, were developing in witnesses the general thought, "Come one, come all, this rock shall fly from its firm base as soon as I."

Sanchez leaped home and returned with his trusty, if somewhat rusty, muleta sword. The bull's vegetable orgy now ceases, and under the flickering street lamps one sees the old meastro, though without benefit of either picadors or banderilleros, bringing the bull into proper position by means of technical passes. The estocada, which crowned the suerte de matar was, dispatches said, superb, not given a-volapie, as is the temptation of weaker men, but reciblendo.

Since 1040, when Don Roderigo Diaz de Vivar first brought death in the afternoon to a selected member of the taural species, those in high places have tried to stop bull-fighting. Ferdinand II was one of several Spanish monarchs who failed even to curtail this popular Iberian pastime. Popes have more than once excommunicated those who brawled with bulls.

It seems, in sooth, to non-Latins and horse lovers, an evil business. But now after centuries, the custom, as shown by Sanchez, has proved that it can render a direct social service. What per cent of the world's curious and well-nigh infinite customs would stand up if put to the same test?

The Post Impressionist

Your Friend at the Conference.

Postoffice, Monday.

WEIGHTY rumors rumble across the Atlantic from Geneva. The League of Nations issues a startling report on the war between Bolivia and Paraguay—in spite or because of which, the Armaments Conference may be resumed with hope of an agreement. A new gathering of the powers (America included) may be called to deal with the latest phase of Japanese policy toward China. But what most worries the newspaper correspondents usually assigned to "cover" such convocations—and what should therefore worry you—is a still unsubstantiated rumor that G. V. Ward may not be there.

For Ward is your friend. Upon G. V. has depended the issuance of 90 per cent of the "spot news" you have ever received concerning any No. 1 international conference held anywhere in Europe since 1922.

* * * *

"Spot news." We are not now talking about the "tip-offs" which a correspondent occasionally gets from some delegate. We are not talking of the statements let loose when the head of this or that delegation "meets the press"—no, nor yet of the "news" handed out by those "press-liaison officers" who accompany most delegations.

We are talking about official news, which bears the stamp of the conference as a whole.

The fountain of such news for most conferences is the League of Nations' information section. It manages all that sort of thing in Geneva. Because of its familiarity with the routine of these conclaves, it is asked to send—and does send—a staff to handle the "information" of nearly every conference held anywhere else.

It has lots of other duties, too, but its most nerve rackingly time-pressing duty is this of getting out the spot news on the spot. It has lots of able officers—men from 14 nations—but the officer directly responsible for the mechanics of this duty is G. V. Ward.

* * * *

The conference meets; even if its session is public, the best correspondent can't hear all that is said and immediately transmit all that is news. But, close beneath the tribune, Ward has posted two miracle-working stenographers, whom she relieves every half hour by two others. The relieved pair run to a room under Ward's direction where they dictate their notes to girls at typewriters, making one "original" and a couple of carbon copies. Ward keeps one copy for the files, sends another for editing by the delegate whose words it records, takes the third direct to the press-room and tacks it on a bulletin board.

Long before the last part of a normally lengthy speech has been delivered in the conference-hall, the correspondents in the press-room can be transcribing its beginnings. Those beginnings may be in the newspaper on your Washington desk before the conference-delegates have heard the end of the speech in Europe.

And your unknown friend who made this possible for you is G. V. Ward.

* * * *

Miss G. Vera Ward, who always signs herself just "G. V. Ward," is British. And she is probably the most efficient office-manager in the world.

* * * *

But she is also the world's greatest autocrat. The dictators could take lessons from her. If a correspondent fails to satisfy the strictly impartial, severely high, journalistic standards of Miss Ward, that correspondent might almost as well abandon any attempt to benefit by her tremendous ability.

For instance: She will permit no nearsighted newspaperman to detach those reports that she has tacked to the bulletin board. What he wants he must do his best to copy among his shouldering colleagues. Otherwise, he must await the second process: In the transferroom, smoother, more carefully edited versions are being read to typists who stencil them on wax paper, wherefrom rotographs, or roneo-machines, will grind out copies for personal distribution. But take one of those first copies from the bulletin board—and G. V. will make you ashamed of yourself.

She is Supreme Potentate of the Press Room. She is Hegemonic Margravine of the Press-Seats in the Conference Hall.

* * * *

Swarms of correspondents attend a conference. Lots of them will be men or women new to the scene, yet, within 24 hours, Miss Ward knows each. Sometimes a newcomer will have the hardihood to lend his ticket to a nonjournalistic acquaintance who wants a glimpse of the Great Show. The acquaintance may pass a dozen doorkeepers, for they rarely look at the photographs adorning admission cards. But Miss Ward will spot the interloper unerringly.

She advances atiptoe—the mouser approaches the rat. A tap on the guilty shoulder. Is the response a bluff? The czarina has a nod that launches terror, compels obedience. She nods first at the intruder, next at the door—and the former shamefacedly fades through the latter.

* * * *

G. V. is jealous for her journalist's privileges. The Press-Room is reserved exclusively for correspondents, and she enforces the reservation. One fevered afternoon, she looked in and saw a stranger. Him, too, she tapped.

"What newspaper do you represent?"

"I am not a correspondent."

"Quite. So you mustn't be here."

"But," truthfully protested the wretch, "I am the accredited delegate of the —— Government to the present conference."

"I know it. So you mustn't be in this room."

And he didn't linger.

* * * *

If there is anything in the rumor of G. V's. resignation, it must mean that another country is going dictator and is wise enough to have chosen Miss Ward for its boss. But her donning of that new purple will spell the ruin of the next conference.

Carlisle Bargeron

HERE is the way in which some editors I know would discuss the dust storm which swept out of the West and darkened our fair city:

Many people have found the dust storm which threw a pall over our midst quite disagreeable. It rendered what would have been very clear skies murky and caused particles to fly in one's eye and also caused one's lips to become dry. Upon leaving one's house for the first time after the dust had come one was first impressed with the general cloudiness and then with the thickness of the air. One's first thought was that there was a great conflagration nearby, that the smoke and embers were settling over our community.

BARGERON.

Then there came the recollection of the stories which had been appearing in the newspapers about the great dust storms which were laying low the crops of the Middle West. Could it be that we are getting some of this dust, one asked.

* * * *

Inquiry at the Weather Bureau and at local newspapers revealed that was exactly what we were getting. Amazement was expressed that this could be so. It is one of the phenomena of nature that dust picked up from the wheat lands of the Middle West could be blown so far, that the elements would carry this dust in their atmospheric pouches for so long a distance.

Housewives of the Nation's Capital were put to considerable inconvenience. Many of them were engaged in doing their spring cleaning or having their spring cleaning done. As one well knows, whether a housewife is doing her spring cleaning or having it done the windows of one's house are likely to be thrown wide open. The result, most naturally, was that when the housewife either finished with her spring cleaning or with having had it done, the house was in worse shape than it had been before. This, of course, is provoking. To that extent, then, one might well upbraid the Administration and insist that it take steps immediately to put an end to this inconvenience.

* * * *

On the other hand, there were pleasant features about the dust. It gave us an unusual layer, a colorful hue and set up sort of a mysterious haze about our monumental structures such as the Washington Monument, the Capitol and Lincoln Memorial. There were times when one could not see their sheer majesty through the gloom. This caused one to think whether or not they were still there.

Thought of this kind, thought about the uncertainty of things is frequently good for one's soul. It causes one to realize that there is over all of us something utterly beyond our control. It is this occasional thinking that keeps one's feet on the ground.

We had the opportunity, too, in this instance, to consider the advantages of our city as a place of residence, and of the efficient service which our Commissioners render. We do not ordinarily have the inconvenience that other cities of the country have.

* * * *

It is a fact, too, that some of our most substantial and law-abiding citizens live in the Middle West whence this dust came. They are given to agriculture and this experience comes as an illustration of some of the hazards which these hardy people face.

We have many Middle Westerners in our midst. They belong to our State societies and serve in our Government. We meet them frequently in our department stores and we know that while many of them are tillers of the soil, they are in no wise like the dust that followed them. The truth is more likely that they came here hoping to escape it, but that like the loyal dog, it followed them.

Mr. Roosevelt is a good man. He is not in favor of dust. Probably some of the men around him are bringing the dust here without his knowledge. He has so much to do. But we are confident that he will make a study and take the necessary steps to eliminate it.

I'll give one guess as to what editor or which editors I have in mind.

Russia Takes a Turn for the Worse.

Soviet Russia has launched an Own-Your-Own-Car movement among the workers. This would seem to indicate that Stalin is slipping and is anxious to see the people too busy with Sunday picnic plans to notice what is going on.

* * * *

Maybe his latest five-year plan depends for its success on a national traffic jam which the lowliest peasant can enjoy.

* * * *

The Russian masses may think they have suffered enough, but they won't know what anguish is until they have to go through the ordeal of getting nine people and a dog in a four-passenger flivver, driving to the country in Sunday traffic and then finding the box-lunch full of red ants.

* * * *

And after one experience trying to back an 8-foot car into a 4-foot parking space any Russian will be willing to admit that life under the old Czarist regime was soft.

* * * *

Stalin is even encouraging workers to buy cars on the time-payment plan. This reflects a strange determination to transfer the people's minds from the subject "Is Sovietism a Success?" to "Why Will an Auto Manuafacturer Spend Years in Developing a Good Car for $500 and Still Throw in a Thirty-five-Cent Kit of Tools?"

* * * *

The question for the Soviet bosses to consider gravely is this: Can a nation that is half auto owner and half installment collector endure?

* * * *

Students of history, traffic and Sunday outings believe Stalin is making his first major mistake in trying to put Russia in rumble seats. Up to this moment the Russians believe they have been making rapid progress.

* * * *

Another NRA Problem.

A hearing by the NRA on the Fly Swatter Manufacturing Industry, set for this week, has been canceled. We understand one of the big problems to be gone over is whether the Government should aid the industry by a fund to breed more flies.

When Everybody Talks About Fire, Somebody Will Start One

By Robert Quillen

If you were a grocer and your rival in business gave you a brusque warning to quit selling flour to his neighbors, you would be sorely tempted to answer impolitely and prepare for battle.

But if you were selling liquor to the man's neighbors, and liquor made them a menace to his life and property, his demand that you quit would seem more reasonable.

When some statesman suggested that China's manpower be used to help the Allies overwhelm Germany, Japan vetoed the suggestion immediately, She dared not permit the awakening and arming of her great neighbor.

Now Japan is determined to subdue and dominate China, and the first item of her strategy is an impolite declaration that she will not permit other nations to equip the Chinese for war.

Ajax defying the lightning could not impress beholders more.

To the Chinese it means the death of hope. Japan is strong enough to defy the world. China has no friend to take up arms in her defense.

As a matter of fact, Japan is able to make such a grandstand play because she is willing to fight and she knows full well that other nations are not.

Well, why should Americans think of fighting? If they were trying to keep Mexico harmless, they would tolerate no arming of the Mexicans by Japanese. And Japan's right to establish an Asiatic "Monroe Doctrine" can not be disputed by a nation that set the example.

If irresponsible people keep on talking and thinking about a war between America and Japan, war there will be when the time is ripe.

And it won't be a distant war, easily won. If the Japanese strike before declaring war, as they doubtlers will—not being handicapped by any such idealistic nonsense as chivalry—little yellow men may land on the Pacific Coast before America is ready to begin fighting.

The future may bring some reason for war, but there is none now. And any talk of war is a foolish meddling with dynamite.

Ellicott City Bank May Be Reopened

State Official Approves Reorganization Plan.

Mount Airy, Md., May 13 (Spl.). A plan whereby the Ellicott City (Howard County) Branch of the defunct Central Trust Co. may be reorganized has been officially approved by State Bank Commissioner John J. Ghinger and copies of the proposal are now being mailed to all depositors. Before being submitted to the commissioner for his approval, 25 per cent of the depositors had voiced approval of the reorganization move.

According to the reorganization plan, 30 days must elapse before application can be made to the Circuit Court for final approval and ratification. The 30-day period is to enable the depositors dissatisfied with the plan to file formal objections.

Liquidation, it is said, would be accompanied by a great loss resulting from immediate disposal of securities and assets which now have little market value.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

"Shark! Shark!"

There are innumerable commonly accepted statements that are either doubled or denied by individuals who are or think they are superior. For example, if you wish to turn a peaceful, placid dinner party into a tumultuous scene of angry debate, all you have to do is to suggest that the mole has no eyes.

When this question has finally begun to lose interest (it will not be settled) then you might suggest that wolves never attack human beings; and behold the fires of debate are rekindled. The only scene in a novel read many years ago that I remember vividly was the eating of a man by a pack of wolves. The novel was by the once-famous Hungarian writer, Maurus Jokai (1823-1904); it was called "Eyes Like the Sea." The heroine had green eyes, I think; though I will not bet on it; they may have been blue. But what I remember is that two men climbed a tree to avoid a pack of wolves, and the animals kept leaping up, in a vain endeavor to reach the men. One of the two unfortunately shouted and laughed at the wolves in derision; when suddenly they rushed at the tree in three-storied formation, one on the back of another and a third on his back; by a supreme effort, they caught the man's foot, dragged him down and in less than a few seconds had eaten everything except his boots. It was a most unpleasant experience not only for him but for his comrade. Well, did such a thing happen outside of novels?

Now as to whether sharks attack healthy men or not, there is an immense divergence of opinion. The late Louis Becke, who loved to make his readers suffer, in one of his novels described men and women in a rowboat; the sharks came up, bit off the blades of the oars, the boats broached to, and the sharks devoured the passengers.

Some years ago that Polyanna newspaper man, Ed Howe, said that the only individual or thing that an editor could safely attack, was the man-eating shark. But is there such a fish?

Well, to those who are interested in these submarine pirates, I recommend a grisly but exciting book recently (1933) published, called "Shark! Shark!" It is by Capt. William E. Young, is copiously illustrated with horrid pictures, and records the adventures of a man who has spent 30 years hunting sharks.

One of the interesting things he says about sharks is that they never sleep. They are too hungry to take any repose. They can not therefore be psycho-analyzed. Incidentally, we can not now say what we used to say of bad persons, that they are good only while they sleep.

This book is bound in shark leather.

No End of Books

By
Theodore Hall

IN the rush of overtime night work, the lights go out in a lumber products factory. The men at the machines turn off their dead switches in the dark. They hoot and cat-call. Little by little they grow exasperated, and come out from behind their protective shells. The darkness loosens them, leads them to expose the pressure and strain under which they work. The scene, the men, and the hates and fears inside them are illuminated by the blackness itself.

By such a soundly dramatic device, Robert Cantwell opens his second novel, "The Land of Plenty" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50). His first, "Laugh and Lie Down," placed him at one step among the leading writers of proletarian literature. I find it hard to believe the book in hand does not find him at the peak of the van. For he makes the workers, not walking Marxist tracts, but round and solid human beings. He puts them in an environment which is made grim by its unrolling effects, not by an author's easy say-so. He does no preaching from the sidelines—the characters act out the story, and the sole comment lies in the ironic title.

THEO. HALL.

* * * *

The motto he places at the front of the book sets a new style. Where once the literary man chose an orotund passage from Plato or Sir Thomas Browne, Mr. Cantwell leads off with a quotation from the "Census of Manufacturers." (Though how a Government bulletin in 1931, as my text reads, could report statistics for 1933 in the past tense is more than I see—but let that pass.) I quote in part from this motto: "The Bureau of the Census announces that . . . the value of the output of timber products and lumber in the United States in 1933 . . . amounted to $441,587,205, a decrease of 65.2 per cent as compared with $1,267,373,693 reported for 1929 . . ." In such cool terms lies the gist and moving force of this moiling, passionate, troubled novel.

For from the incident of the lights going out, there is a steady rising of temperature. Clashes of one harassed worker with another, growing labor troubles for the bosses, growing distress and deprivation for the workers—all lead to the final mob violence between laborers, scabs and police.

But in the meantime we have watched the characters one by one—Carl, the young foreman and efficiency engineer; Walt, the college boy, lonely and desperate; the two "Polack" sisters; McMahon, the superintendent, a drunkard quarreling with his wife; his daughter Rose; and all the varied workers in the mill. Where once they were units in a production chart—and if there is one thing this novel shows it is the fearful presence of a constant "cracking down," from the Eastern owners down the line to the humblest floor-sweeper—they are now all human beings. A reduction of 65.2 per cent in timber products spreads a long way in human terms. From that truism, clearly seen and made the most of, rises the power of this novel.

I could make only one wish that Mr. Cantwell's style might have avoided its breathless repetition of phrases and dialogue. Saying a thing four times does not make it art. But beyond that, Mr. Cantwell may be proud of many attainments—not the least of which is the fact that he dropped the second-novel jinx entirely out the window.

What its 1849 readers knew as "The Personal History, Experience, and Observation of David Copperfield the Younger, of Blunderstone Rookery, Which He Never Meant to Be Published on Any Account," is still a very favorite book.

Of all his works Dickens liked it the best. He once wrote: "It will be easily believed that I am a fond parent to every child of my fancy, and that no one can ever love that family as dearly as I love them. But, like many fond parents, I have in my heart of hearts a favorite child. And his name is David Copperfield."

This seems to be a Dickens spring. The Modern Library has just brought out "Copperfield" ($0.95) as its book of the month. It makes a stout and attractive little volume 923 pages, illustrated with 39 drawings by "Phiz" (Hablot K. Browne) which appeared in the original edition.

I think it would be worth an attack of amnesia to come again to the first fresh acquaintance with Mr. Peggoty, Mr. Micawber and "Barkis's willin'."

Chao Mei Pa, China Tenor, To Sing Here

European Training Has Developed Natural Vocal Talents.

Mrs. Anne Archbold Will Be Host to Select Group.

In ages long gone by, when this fairly well civilized country was little more than an unexplored playground for Indians and deer, a large nation on the other side of the Pacific was treating with nonchalance the existence of libraries, factories and any number of unexpected things. Although China has now been overtaken in many ways by this country in her rapid stride, she still retains her high seat in the world of art. There is something undescribably beautiful and elusive about Oriental art, and in many American homes, dainty etchings and embroideries are given the places of honor on the panels and tables.

It is without a bit of astonishment that one learns of the growing popularity of still another art in China's collection. It is that of music.

There is visiting in Washington now a young gentleman, Mr. Chao Mei Pa, who spent his childhood and early years in Shanghai. He attended the university there, going from the undergradute classes on through the four academic years.

He had always been a rather jolly person, bursting forth into bits of song at frequent intervals. His voice, strong and clear, attracted considerable attention and so friends and relatives decided that he should be sent to Belgium to study at the Conservatoire Royal de Musique in Brussels.

In Belgium, Chao Mei Pa's songs, with their simplicity and all the charms of the old Pentaphomies, were received with enthusiasm. In London and Paris it was the same. He was a hit. He sings equally well in any tongue, seeming to understand and really enjoy each song and possessing a remarkable knowledge of Western music.

Now, after his years of studying in Europe, he is returning to his own country. He will remain in Washington this week as the guest of the Minister of China and Mme. Sze, at the Legation.

Saturday afternoon he will give a few selections at the tea to be given by Mrs. Anne Archbold in her home, then members of Washington society will have the opportunity of hearing and seeing this young artist who is capable of interesting them as much as most of the artists of old Europe and who has the added touch of something new and different.

Mrs. Tazewell Taylor, of Norfolk, Va., with Mrs. Walter C. Maher and the latter's daughter, of Virginia Beach, Va., are returning to their respective homes today after spending the past week-end at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Children's Theater Group May 26 to Witness "Treasure Island."

Juvenile matinee parties will be held at the National Theater, Saturday morning, May 26, when, under the auspices of the Women's International League, the young subscribers to the Children's Theater will witness a performance of Robert Louis Stevenson's thrilling tale of pirates and buccaneers, "Treasure Island," by Washington's Community Players.

The players were organized by Bess Schreiner to present "Alice in Wonderland" last summer at the National Sylvan Theater.

With Mrs. Roosevelt as one of its important patronesses, the Children's Theater has been presenting a succession of fine performances brought from New York City by Mrs. Clare Tree Major throughout the past two seasons.

Plans are being completed by the Women's International League through Miss Matilda Young and Miss Mabel Vernon to bring this same talented group of New York Children's Theater Players here again next season. The Community Players' production of "Treasure Island" will be offered as an extra attraction for boys and girls and their parents. Through this performance it is hoped to pay off a small deficit in the Children's Theater fund incurred this season.

Choral Society Festival Is Set for Thursday

Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe's Works to Be Features of Program.

With a distinguished list of sponsors headed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge herself, and with "first public performance" attached to several of its announced program numbers, the Washington Choral Society, of which Mr. Myron W. Whitney is president, will present its annual festival concert Thursday at 8:15 p. m. in Central High School Auditorium.

The two-hundredth anniversary of the composition of "The Four Seasons" by J. S. Bach, which had its Washington premiere by this choral group last May, and the first performance in the Capital City of America's popular composer's musical setting of Oliver Wendell Holmes' famous poem of "The Chambered Nautilus," may account for some of the interest in the approaching concert, but the feature will be the performance of choral works by Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, known musically and familiarly as "Mary Howe."

Two of Mrs. Howe's compositions to be heard on Thursday night are new to Washingtonians: "Catalina" and Shelley's "Music When Soft Voices Die." These will be offered by the "madrigal group," headed by Miss Helen Howison. The group includes Miss Mildred Colvin, Miss Vera Neely Ross, Miss Bertha Morgan, Mr. George Myers, Mr. H. I. Maycock, Mr. Edwin Steffe and Mr. Aubrey Goodrich.

Mrs. Howe's famous "Chain Gang Song" will likewise be featured on the festival program, and will be sung by the ensemble of voices, assisted by the chamber orchestra of the National Symphony, using the special instrument imported by Mrs. Howe from North Carolina to make the noise of the chains. Mrs. Howe was inspired to compose this piece by hearing a section of the chain gang in North Carolina singing as they worked along the roadside.

Grey or Beige Footwear Worn Now for Street

If You're Looking for Something Like This, Here's Interesting Sale.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

SHOPPERS WHO aren't buying white shoes now probably have their weather eye open for some gray or beige ones. A large percentage of these shoppers do not want cheap ones—they feel too friendly toward their feet for that. But at the same time, they'd just as soon pay as little as possible.

To suit their wants and purses an F street shop is selling out 365 pairs of gray and beige shoes. Only a short time ago they were priced at $5 and $8.50. Now they are down to $3.65 and $4.90.

The manaager of the shop in a short and friendly chat said it was their objective to furnish a high quality shoe for a medium price, and added there was no necessity for comfortable and healthful shoes to be expensive luxuries. He is seeing to it they aren't.

Next to Nothing.

"Briefs" are all their name implies. They are panties, in combination crepe and net, or else all lace. And do they fit! At least, what there is of them, does.

The clinging silk frocks of summer should fit smoothly and without bulges and wrinkles from loose lingerie. No better way to guard against such ridges than by having a "brief" for every occasion.

Just as summer underthings should be, these are cool as they look—and that's saying something! Furthermore, it only takes a few seconds to launder them, and only a few more for them to dry.

Inexpensive Miscellani.

A closeout of odds and ends in the basement of a downtown store disclosed an assortment of things with story-book prices.

Mixing bowls that look strangely forlorn and batterless are there in several sizes trying their best to go for 25 or 29 cents. They sold some time ago for considerably more.

Kitchen carving knives and forks with sturdy wooden handles, stainless steel blades and prongs are 15 cents apiece. Grapefruit knives with serrated edges sell for the same amount.

And Across The Street.

There's a tempting sale across the street at another shop. Here they have bath powder—large boxes of it—that sold once for $2. It's now 49 cents.

Small bottles of $2 perfume are priced at 59 cents! But the most drastic values of all, are the $6 bottles going for $1.69.

Pitter Patter.

When a sudden shower tumbles from a grey-coated sky, shoppers hurry and scurry to purchase umbrellas and rain capes. They buy in haste and repent when the bill comes in.

If they would consider many months of frequent rains are in store they would plan ahead, and do a little selecting at the rain-cape counter of a downtown department store. There are some intriguing values here.

Capes, light enough to carry comfortably over the arm and long and wide enough to cover a street frock, come in numerous designs. There are plain ones, 42 inches in length, all different colors, for 85 cents. Forty-four inch ones are $1.25. Forty-two inch pin checked capes in summer shades are $1.

Like Rainbows.

Pastel pearls, resembling crystallized rainbows are the new summer jewelry offering in a Washington gift shop. They've just come in—but they'll soon be gone. It's that way in this shop. Never an hour of the day that at least three customers aren't there before you. Consequently, there is a standing reorder on most of the merchandise. So if the pearls are gone before you see them, take heart—there will be others.

They come in 16-inch strings, and in triple string bracelets.

Home Dryer.

A certain small electrical instrument hath charms that soothe the head of hair. It's a hair dryer that can be plugged in a socket. You simply hold it in one hand, direct it at the head, and it pours forth a stream of warm air. Which is better, some people think, than sitting for hours under a stationary dryer. And by the way—it's only $1.69.

Eyes on It.

Women who have had their eye on one silver and glass hors d'oeuvre dish will be glad to hear it is marked down to a reasonable sum.

Women who haven't had their eye on it, but are likely to now, may recognize it by the partitioned glass plate that fits into a silver plated tray. When the dish is removed, the tray may be used for sandwiches, cocktails or whatever the occasion calls for.

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Jerome Bonaparte—Elizabeth Patterson

THOUGH BORN with the Atlantic between them, they met in the flush of their youth in old Baltimore. He came equipped with all the elegance of the French court, as the brother of the great Bonaparte, and swept the lovely Betsy Patterson off into a whirlwind marriage. But this wedding of a commoner drew down the imperial wrath on the prince's head. An annulment was accomplished and the prince left his beautiful bride, to see her only once more in their lives.

A Belle of Old Baltimore Captured the Heart of Napoleon's Brother.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

INTERNATIONAL romances have become a commonplace in the last 50 years, but in the days of Prince Jerome Bonaparte and charming "Betsy" Patterson, of Baltimore, they were a novelty indeed.

Elizabeth or "Betsy" Paterson was one American girl who dreamed of a Prince Charming and found him.

Fate in the person of Napoleon Bonaparte intervened and separated the lovers after they were married. But Mme. Bonaparte who lived to be an old lady could echo feelingly those immortal lines of Tennyson's "In Memoriam:"

"I hold it true, what e'er befall;
I feel it when I sorrow most;
'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all."

The bevy of Baltimore belles who welcomed Napoleon's younger brother all were alert for his smiles but it was "Betsy" Patterson who won serious attentions from the dashing young suitor from over the seas surrounded by the glamour reflected from the fame of the great Napoleon.

The whole town turned out to witness the passage of Jerome and his entourage to call upon his fair charmer. It was a sight to behold. In winter he drove in state in a French sleigh, shaped like a lion with a splendidly carved and colored gilded head, with flashing eyes of glass, red tongue lolling from the mouth and flowing, tawny mane. Horses were harnessed in tandem fashion.

This parade of French elegance would arrive at the Patterson home where William Patterson, one of the first citizens of Baltimore, had established a mansion, one of the show places of the city. It was not long before Jerome felt Elizabeth Patterson combined "all the qualities which he could desire" and, in addition "was the most beautiful woman in the world." It is said that even before he had met her he had given her the title of "ma belle femme."

Jerome was the sailor among the Bonapartes. He came to America in 1803 while on a voyage around the world. In September of that year at the races to which social Baltimore flocked, Jerome and Elizabeth Patterson met for the first time.

Elizabeth had been well educated, spoke French fluently, sang and played prettily and was past mistress in the art of coquetry. The day they met she is described as having been dressed in a buff colored silk dress, a hat with long ostrich plumes which set off to advantage her Grecian features, large dark eyes, a dainty mouth and chin, with an exquisite complexion to cap off the whole.

Elizabeth Patterson was accustomed to the attentions of the beaux of Baltimore. She was rather haughty at first to the prince. After all, the Bonapartes were parvenus in the courts of Europe. But his dashing grace and charm won her heart quite apart from his high rank. It was Jerome the man rather than Jerome the prince who held her girlish fancy.

But this time it was real love with Jerome. The prince went to Washington, put the story of his love before Thomas Jefferson and asked him to use his good offices with his imperial brother. Jefferson sympathized with the young lovers but, of course, could take no official steps in their behalf. The French Minister reminded the prince of the obstacles of the French laws. But Jerome laughed at them all.

On Christmas Eve.

It was on Christmas eve, 1803, that Prince Jerome and Elizabeth Patterson were united by the solemn marriage rites of the Roman Catholic Church performed by the Right Rev. John Carroll, Bishop of Baltimore and primate of all America.

What a picture of youth, grace and romance the contracting parties must have made. He in a bridal costume that Mme. Bonaparte preserved to her dying day, a purple coat of satin, skirt lined with white satin, reaching to his heels, gleaming knee buckles and diamond buckles on his shoes. And Betsy Patterson! How lovely was she in her embroidered French robe so gossamer-like and exquisitely fine that a wedding guest declared he could have put it in his coat pocket.

John Comegys was "right hand man," or what would be called "best man" in these days. The honeymoon journey was made by coach to Washington. The horses ran away and the bride was pitched out into a snowdrift, unharmed. The happy pair laughed merrily and kept on their way.

While the honeymooners lingered in Baltimore and Washington word of what had happened sped over seas to the first consul. He fumed and fretted and cut off the source of supplies, ordering Jerome to return at once to France and leave his bride behind him. Jerome laughed again. Would not his brother succumb as soon as he saw his bride? In the last event, Jerome could become an American citizen and keep the ocean between him and his irate brother.

But on May 18, 1804, Napoleon was proclaimed emperor and it was all the more imperative that Jerome be separated from his American wife. They set off for Paris, and got as far as Lisbon after shipwrecks and other perils. Word came there that the emperor was obdurate and it was thought best that Jerome should face his wrath alone. So they parted with tears and kisses and fond embraces, presumably for just a little while. It proved to be forever.

The Kind Emperor.

Jerome told a friend: "The emperor is kind—he is just. Even admitting that I had committed a fault in marrying Miss Patterson without his consent, is this the moment for inflicting punishment?

But in twelve days the struggle was over. Jerome had sacrificed his love for the glittering distant glory of a crown.

England gave refuge to Mme. Bonaparte and the tiny son who was born on July 7, 1805.

Letters came from Jerome protesting undying devotion but he obeyed his brother and kept away from the young mother. Then Napoleon demanded the marriage be annulled. To the eternal honor of the then Pope, his holiness refused the annulment. A bishop was found who was more complaisant and while Elizabeth Bonaparte waited for her husband's return, their marriage was annulled and plans were made for Jerome's marriage to Prince Frederica Catherine of Wurttemberg. In December Jerome was crowned King of Westphalia. Then he demanded his young son.

With spirit Elizabeth refused and likewise the offer to become Princess of Schmalkalden and her son be made a prince. She wrote back: "Westphalia is not large enough for two queens, and as to the annuity, I prefer to be sheltered under the wing of an eagle rather than to be suspended from the bill of a goose." Napoleon was so delighted with her spirit he offered her 60,000 francs a year on condition that she relinquish the name of "Bonaparte." She replied she would never consent to barter a name which had been made so famous.

In 1813 in order to protect her son and his property rights in America, Mme. Bonaparte applied for a divorce in the courts of Maryland and won it, of course.

From the haven of Maryland, Mme. Bonaparte watched the upward flight and then the downfall of the Bonapartes. Before long she saw her recreant husband "a bankrupt king without a kingdom."

Mme. Bonaparte frequently visited Europe with her son. Then came a day in Florence when she came face to face with Jerome and his wife and daughter, Matilde. The former queen of Westphalia had grown fat and unshapely with the years, Elizabeth was still slender and lovely. She threw open her coat so Jerome could see how gently time had dealt with her figure and passed on without a word as his eyes fell to the ground in what we may hope was remorse at his treachery.

Elizabeth Patterson was more loyal to Napoleon than some of his relatives. When misfortune overtook him she upheld him valiantly. When her presence was requested at the court of Louis XVIII so the king might express personally his sympathy over her treatment at the hands of Napoleon, she retorted she did not consider herself the victim of imperial tyranny, although, she had been sacrificed to political considerations. Furthermore, she said, she had accepted the kindness of the emperor and ingratitude was not one of her vices. How Napoleon must have regretted his interference in his brother's romance with such a noble woman.

Honored and adored by her townspeople, Elizabeth Patterson lived out her days in Baltimore. Her story became a legend and her home was pointed out as sheltering one who should have been a queen but for the weak will of a man whom she had loved "not wisely but too well."

The French Emperor Intervened to Break Up the Romantic Idyll.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Metabolism and Heart Disease.

Within recent years there have been many reports on lowering the metabolic rate as a means of treating certain kinds of heart disease. The types of heart disease referred to are those in which the heart muscle is finding difficulty in doing the work it is called on to do; the cases in which compensation is broken or a break is threatened.

Methods of treatment used in the past belong in three classes:

First lessening the original cause. Since this is often a scarring of a valve due to a long antecedent case of rheumatism, sore throat, St. Vitus dance, or other infection, the harm can not be remedied or even lessened.

The second was to stimulate the heart muscle to do more work. For this purpose exercise and work are prescribed in set amounts and of designated kinds; drugs, usually of the digitalis group, are used; and good food and good air are employed to build up good muscle by means of good nutrition.

The third consists of measures to lessen the work that the heart has to do. These have consisted of prescribed rest, such as refraining from work and exercise—inaction such as rest in bed, rest in a chair, spending the cold season in warm climates and at low altitudes, wearing warm clothing, and procedures of those types.

The more recently reported on procedures belong in this third group. The proposal is to lessen the amount of work the heart muscle is loaded with by lowering the metabolism of the tissues and thus decreasing their need for blood.

Spaghetti Isn't the Only Italian Dish That's Delicious; Here Are Some Others That Are Particularly Tasty for Informal Sunday Suppers.

By Susan Mills.

THERE'S NOTHING that fills the informal supper bill like spaghetti. If you make the sauces yourself and catch the delicious flavor of the Italian cuisine, you will have a reputation for being a delightful cook. Your friends will want to "come over for supper again."

But there are other Italian recipes equally delicious. Here are a few:

Minestrone.

½ pound salt pork
2 quarts water
1 clove garlic
2 carrots, sliced
1 cup dried beans, soaked
1-3 cup chopped celery
Any left-over vegetables
1 tablespoon fat
¼ cup pasta or rice, as preferred
1 teaspoon salt
¼ medium cabbage, shredded

Boil pork and water for one hour. Grind the pork with the garlic and parsley. Add all other ingredients except the cabbage. Simmer for two hours and then add cabbage. Cook 10 minutes longer. Sprinkle with grated cheese if desired and serve with Italian bread.

Bolognese Sauce.

This is good with macaroni, other pasta, or polenta:

¼ pound round steak, ground
2 ounces salt pork
1 carrot, chopped
2 tablespoons chopped onion
¼ cup chopped celery
1 tablespoon fat
2 tablespoons flour
2 cups broth or water
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper

Brown the meat and vegetables in the fat. Add the flour and the broth or water and simmer one-half hour. Pour on cooked macaroni, other pasta, or polenta. Serve at once. This quantity of sauce will be enough for 4 cups of cooked pasta (8 ounces uncooked), or polenta made from 1 cup uncooked corn meal. This sauce may also be served over rice or potatoes.

What Today Means

"Taurus."

If May 14 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. until noon, from 3:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 12:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m.

If you have started the day with a vague feeling of dissatisfaction, throw your chest out, pull your shoulders back and vigorously inhale three or four times—copious, lung-filling gobs of fresh air—and the world will seem much brighter. You may be disappointed in not receiving a reply regarding a matter in which you are interested. Do not be discouraged, for it is only a question of the decision being delayed. You will start attending to some matter entirely new on this date in either a social or business way, which will terminate succesfully, and earn you praise.

If a woman, and born on May 14, you love outdoor life, and eventually will find a great deal of peace and happiness in the country. Flowers will play a very important part in helping you to make a decision, after their soothing effect has caused cool deliberation. It may be surprising to discover how tranquilizing flowers will prove if a few are kept in your room. Possessing an excellent eye for color and having unusually good taste, the millinery and interior decorating businesses offer opportunities for your skill.

May 14 will prove a very busy but lucrative day for people of the "go-getter" type. This will prove an excellent day for the formulation of new ideas and for planning business activities.

I WAS A SPY!

By MARTHE McKENNA

Bowling along the road toward Westroosebeke with the lorry full of wounded half an hour later, the kiss of the warm sun stirred my spirits. I looked at the blue sky, wondering, in an impersonal way, if this was the last time I should see it. In the background hovered that vague feeling of fear as experienced by someone who is on his way to hospital to undergo a dangerous but inevitable operation. We caught up with the long marching column from Roulers, and as we rumbled past I wondered how many of those men, marching with careles hearts behind the blaring bands, were marching to their death.

There was practically nothing left of Westroosebeke, which I had not seen since that morning I had left it with the other women early in 1915, nothing but low walls and piles of broken bricks and fragments. Already large numbers of troops were waiting formed in close ranks on the outskirts of the village. As the lorry slowed down I could not help thinking of the felon arriving at the place of execution, try as I would. How I hoped that the "Seven Sisters" would not come! And yet, strangely enough, how I wanted them to come!

Ears Strained for Planes.

In every direction the whole countryside was dotted with little hastening groups in twos and threes anxious to put the danger zone behind them. The "Seven Sisters" were zooming overhead in great sweeping circles, every now and then diving with savage burst of machine-gun fire to encourage the unfortunates below to fresh efforts to escape. It made me think of a day when I had watched police dispersing industrial strikers. They must have had a good laugh, those airmen.

The "Seven Sisters" soon grew tired of harassing the fugitives, who were becomnig more and more widely scattered, and I think also this sort of slaughter appeared too "easy money" to be greatly to their liking. They could certainly feel content with the damage they had done. At a signal from their leader they swerved into formation and sailed away out of sight.

Crossing the Place on my way home about 8 o'clock the next morning, I noticed "Silent Willy" slouching across to his billet on the opposite side with a pannikin of tea. I was glad he was alive, and that made me think of Fashugel. I went upstairs to my room, and noticed with more than gladness that the door of Fashugel's room stood a quarter open and that there was movement inside. A little later, after washing and tidying myself, I went down to see what food we had in the house. When I was half-way down the stairs, I heard a dull thud of some heavy body on the landing, and glancing up saw that Fashugel's batman had just thrown out a large canvas kit-bag through the door of his room. Then the man himself came out carrying a suitcase. I caught my breath.

"Is the Herr Hauptmann going away?" I put tremulously.

"He's gone, Fraulein," he muttered grimly.

"What do you mean?"

"All we could find of the Herr Hauptmann yesterday morning was a split field boot with a spur on it. I'm taking his gear along to Brigade now so that it can be sent home to his mother. It's a pity, for we'll not get another company commander like him if this cursed war lasts till the crack of doom—yes, a bloody fine officer was our Fashugel, and the fellows will miss him!"

Toward the autumn, the German general staff issued orders which had their repercussion behind the lines. One day Alphonse came into my ward and made a signal that he wished to speak to me outside. In the corridor he handed me a buff form, a requisition for medical supplies, and whispered hurriedly:

"This has come from the aerodrome hospital section. You have been waiting to get inside the Rumbeke Aerdrome for a long time. Here is your chance. All these articles requisitioned are small and can be carried in one case. You can call there and leave them with Feldwebel Schweitzer on your way home."

"And here is something special for you," Alphonse went on. "In the canteen they are talking of the recent successful bombing of London. Mathy, the Zeppelin commander, is being made a hero. They say he is to lead a colossal raid very soon which will cripple the English and create terror and consternation throughout the country."

Some hope lay in Feldwebel Schweitzer. He used to make boisterous love to me in odd corners, seeming childishly pained and surprised at the cold reception he had received.

Feldwebel Schweitzer lay snoring in his bunk. At my knock he roused.

"What the hell——?" he growled. "Didn't I give orders that I wasn't to be disturbed—ah. Fraulein—wie reizend.—Thank God for a pretty face! You have brought the medical stores. I thank you, meine fraulein."

Pokes Head Around Corner.

After poking his head around the corner, he shut the door and offered me a cigarette.

"Who is this Mathy from whom you expect such great things?" I put innocently.

"You ought to have read the accounts in the German papers of his last few raids. I bet there are quite a lot of people over in England saying their prayers of a night in these days." He chuckled hoarsely.

"Take it from me," he grinned, "there is going to be no mistake this time. Word has come through from the higher command. On October 1—you will see!" He wagged his close-cropped head mysteriously. "It will be the most colossal raid of the war, and London will go—pouff." He threw up his hands in a dramatic gesture. "It is said Mathy is to lead 11 Zeppelins," he continued. "Two go from Bruges, the rest from the fatherland. By Christmas we shall be home, nein?"

Suddenly his long arms were around me, his lips slobbering over my face. I tried to wrench myself away, but he had a hug like a bear. For what seemed hours I struggled. Beads of sweat came out on Schweitzer's red face and he panted like an animal. Suddenly he hurled me backward so that my knees caught the edge of the stretcher, and gave a grunt of triumph. I screamed, hardly hoping that anyone would hear, for the medical hut was isolated some little distance from the rest of the buildings, but suddenly the door opened. Over the German's shoulder I saw an officer looking down at us.

"What's all this—what the blasted hell is going on here, Schweitzer?" he shouted in a thunderous voice. Schweitzer jumped as if shot, and stood regarding the officer in a hang-dog way.

"Stand to attention when I speak to you, d'you hear? What are you doing with this woman? Why is there nobody on duty? Great God, you, fraulein!" Questions and fury gushed from him, while Schweitzer stood like a ramrod. He was the duty officer of the day at the aerodrome; he was one of their crack pilots with a reputation. He had been badly wounded in an air combat, and had been in the hospital for a month for treatment, where we had become good friends. I explained to him my reason for being at the aerodrome.

"Follow me, please," and he closed the door behind us, leaving Feldwebel Schweitzer to his thoughts.

"Fraulein," he ventured, "I have not seen you for a long time now. Do me an honor this evening if you are feeling in a gracious mood. Come and dine with me. I am on duty, as you see, so tonight I am destined to dine here at the Aerodrome in the duty officer's hut in solitary state; at least I was so destined until I met you." He turned and caught my hands. "You will be kind—eh, meine Fraulein?"

"Very well, Herr Lieutenant," I smiled, 'I will dine with you, but I shall not stay late afterwards."

Suddenly my eye caught five planes drawn up on the edge of the landing ground, and close by a new wooden hangar was in the course of building. These were single-seater biplanes with little fair round bodies suggestive of speed, of a type I had not seen before.

"I see you are overflowing here, Herr Lieutenant," I said lightly, beckoning towards the row of biplanes.

"Ah, the little Albatrosses, Fraulein—yes, we have not had time to house them yet. They suddenly appeared out of the sky on the evening of the day before yesterday without any previous warning. They are straight from the factory and we are the first to get them. The Kommandant handed them over to my flight for service testing out.

"Well, Fraulein," he encouraged, throwing open the door of the duty officer's hut. "I can't offer you a first-class dinner, I'm afraid, but it's as good as you would find at home I expect in these hard times—and there's plenty to drink at any rate." Selecting a bottle from the little group which clustered on the central table, he poured two kummels.

By the time the batman made his appearance with plates, knives and forks, I knew how many planes there were in the Aerodrome, their capabilities and much other useful information besides.

The airman rose. "Fraulein," he said, "will you excuse me for a moment. I have to finish my report on the Albatross this evening, for the Kommandant will want to see it tomorrow morning. It is only a matter of five minutes." He set to work at a table in the corner fitted up as a writing-table. Nearby was his application for a long overdue leave.

I was thinking idly to myself that if only I could get hold of his aeroplane report it would be of great interest to those over the frontier, but came to the conclusion that I had better be content with what I had learned already.

"If you remember, Fraulein, please remind me to tell my batman to put those two envelopes in the orderly room post-box," he said as he helped me to the stew. He had folded up the aeroplane report and also his leave application and placed each in a separate official envelope.

He had not licked and stuck down the sticky address label on either of the envelopes, presumably leaving that faintly unpleasing task for his faithful batman, and as we ate an idea occurred to me. The envelope in which he had put his leave application must be addressed to the Brigade Major at H. Q., and the one holding the aeroplane report would be addressed to his Kommandant at the Aerodrome orderly room. The two envelopes were still open. Supposing that I could change over the contents, so that the aeroplane report went to Brigade and vice versa, I believed I might be able to procure a copy of the aeroplane report down to the last detail.

Fortunately my friend helped me himself in this matter. When we had finished eating he discovered that his batman had forgotten to bring across his brandy with his drinks from his billet which was not far distant, and he rushed to the door and angrily throwing it open, stood outside and started to roar for him lustily. And here the good batman helped me also, for he was chatting with the men in the guard-room some distance away and did not hear his master for some time. I made the change like lightning, though my fingers seemed to fumble maddeningly, and I was terified that he might turn to speak to me through the door. When he returned grumbling at his batman, I was back in my place. A few minutes later, at his master's order (I had to remind him), the batman had stuck up the envelopes and removed them.

There Are Four Women Here Whose Business It Is to Avert Tragedies of Babies' Deaths; Their Chief Difficulty Lies in Convincing Mothers They Want to Help.

TODAY READERS TURN THE PAGES of "The Scarlet Letter," smugly thankful they were born outside an age when an erring woman was branded for life. Today audiences see modern presentations of "East Lynne," and smile pityingly at the intolerance of the past.

And yet—even today—babies are left on doorsteps. Eight a year is the average for Washington.

The mental hangover concerning what was once the unpardonable sin dies hard. Social workers find it difficult to get across the idea that modern society stands ready to help rather than to hound the mother with an unwanted child.

Because unmarried mothers are ignorant of the enlightened and helpful attitude the world of today takes toward them, babies pay the penalty—often with death, social workers pointed out. Relief agencies are at a disadvantage in caring for the abandoned baby in event it survives its first neglect and exposure. Often the child will die of malnutrition before the doctor can find the proper food. This problem would be alleviated if the mother could be reached.

"If I had only known there was some other way out," say again and again girls who in the temporary insanity of despair have abandoned their babies and later sought to claim them. Often they have returned too late.

At least four understanding women stand ready in Washington to help the mother who does not know what to do with her child. They are Miss Louise O. Beall, Associated Charities, Eleventh and M streets; Miss A. Patricia Morse, Division of Public Welfare, District Building; Miss Mildred Terrett, Juvenile Protective Association, 1212 Eleventh street; Capt. Rhoda Milliken, head of the Woman's Bureau, 1224 Fifth street northwest.

"The family tie is something every human being in the world is entitled to," said Miss Beall. "Therefore when an unmarried mother and her child come under our care we see the problem as a family one. We try to find the baby's father, if the mother is willing, and try to enlist the interest of the mother's relatives if she is estranged from them.

Why Do They Do It.

"However, we never violate a mother's confidence. If she is absolutely opposed to turning to the child's father or to relatives, we work out another solution for her, probably a boarding home for the baby while she seeks employment."

Pointing out the average of eight abandoned babies a year was too high for Washington, Miss Morss declared it was strange mothers would leave their babies to suffer hunger, exposure and possibly death when so many helping hands were extended.

She said the District expended about $300 a year for each baby left in its care and it had been known to care for a child three years without depriving the mother of her claim.

"Mothers about to desert their babies should know of the money the District spends for cod liver oil for undernourished children," said Miss Morss. "Why we even buy especially constructed shoes for our little wards if the examining doctors think it necessary."

They Sympathize.

"With a helping hand always ready for her, it is strange indeed that a mother would leave her baby to suffer hunger and exposure and will place herself in the position of possibly being haunted for life over her child's uncertain fate."

In her position with the welfare division Miss Morss is foster mother to the 1,800 child wards of the District. These include babies, children and adolescents. Many of the babies have come into the District's care from mothers who were unable to acknowledge their children publicly or to care for them financially. Often the District helps the mother a few months or even a year and she is then able to take the care of her child. If she is unable to take back her child plans are made for its permanent adoption. There is never any difficulty in finding good foster homes for children. The number of applications for desirable babies for adoption far exceeds the supply.

Miss Terrett, in her cheery office of the Juvenile Protective Association, offers sympathetic understanding to the mother with unwanted baby.

"The world is becoming more tolerant in regard to the status of the illegitimate child," she said, "but it is surprising how much of the East Lynne attitude still exists."

Miss Terrett and other social workers pointed out that few if any of the mothers abandoning babies were heartless, that the fear of disgrace rivaled so strongly their maternal instincts that in desperate cases the fear triumphed. Financial inability to care for a child also was a factor in desertion cases, they said.

Social workers have found, however, that mothers are usually only temporarily swayed by these emotions. Later they regret their impulsive acts and suffer for what they have done. More general knowledge that social agencies were prepared to care for their babies and would keep all information confidential would eliminate such motives for baby desertion.

New Deal for Babies.

Capt. Milliken, who deals with many baby-and-mother problems, directs the girl in need of assistance to the proper agency. But she also gives personal understanding and sympathy to the case. She, in common with other social workers here, is interested in seeing another year will not have a repetition of last winter's tragedy—two abandoned babies dying from exposure and being buried in a potter's field. She believes knowledge that the modern world is a good Samaritan rather than stern-visaged Puritan will bring about a better deal for the abandoned baby.

This Woman's Beauty-Hunting Days Are Over

She Indulged in All the Aids; the Effect Was Disenchanting.

By Evelyn Voss Wise.

I CAN never attain that perfection of beauty which the ads claim may belong to anyone.

I had been reading the ads. For the first time in ten years I had such a thoroughly competent maid that I found leisure to read and digest the aids to beauty in a current magazine. There were lovely sentences, such as, "Take all your charm with you in swimming this summer" . . . "Little toes, what now? . . . "The Hush following your entrance to a room."

I started at the cosmetic counter. Night cream was what my skin needed, the lady told me, after peering at my face. She sold me a thick paste to be used once a week. I stopped at various other places, feeling quite light and bouyant, like a butterfly about to emerge from a cocoon.

As Directed.

At night I applied the paste as directed. The result was startling. Two eyes stared out of something resembling a plaster cast.

"Mother," my little boy gasped. "You look terrible."

Through tight lips—the paste would not give—I assured him I was merely taking care of my skin.

In the morning I was awakened early by a ring of the door bell. The postman handed me a letter, but his eyes were on my face. Before I had finished reading a colored boy came to the door.

I had forgotten my mask. It took almost an hour to remove that crust. I followed all the directions implicitly and when finished was too exhausted to appreciate "the natural glow" which I was given to expect.

For the next two days I plucked unruly brows, and spent feverish moments with an eyelash curler. I cold-creamed my knees and elbows and did all the little tricks guaranteed to make women alluring.

The Denouement.

The end came when I tried the girdle . . . a bitter but final denouement.

"It will stretch," the salesgirl had promised.

I pulled and jerked and yanked, and finally had the thing around me. I could hardly breathe and my face was purple. For one moment I gazed at myself before I was overcome by panic. How could I get out of it? That terrible feeling . . . like a dress caught over one's head . . . took possession of me. Again that frantic pulling and jerking began and only when it was down at my feet could I breathe. Slowly I raised myself, only to find that in the frenzy I had sprained both shoulders.

Now I am once more at peace. I shall not try to be subtle and distinctive and all those other words. I shall use my old jar of cold cream and go back to my writing.

Keeping Posted

In Grandmother's Dresses.

BECKY TARWATER showed a lot of ingenuity, talent and quaint costumes when she gave her program at the King-Smith Studios Friday night. Everybody knows how gifted both the Tarwater girls are. Their songs of the mountain folk and colored people of their native Tennessee are always in demand.

• • • •

But Becky did something quite different Friday. She gave a series of personality sketches called "The Wives of Henry Cates," and for them she used costumes for which she wrote back to Tennessee.

• • • •

Among them was an old silk and lace wrapper, as they called negligees in Becky's grandmother's time. And this was one of her grandmother's things, lovely in its soft tones of white. Then there was the graduation dress which Becky's aunt wore when she was a "sweet girl graduate."

A Stage-Struck Horse.

ALL THE roads from Washington seem to be leading toward horsey places — Warrenton, Louisville, Pimlico, Middleburg and Bradley Farms, out near the Congressional Club.

• • • •

Horses! Horses! Horses! Everywhere. And one of the most amusing of them all has been playing an important role at Ford's Theater in Baltimore in connection with Florence Reed's sparkling comedy, "Thoroughbred."

• • • •

Bad Girl is the name of this horse and Miss Reed says she has behaved beautifully. She was also in Miss Reed's previous production of the same play at the Auditorium several months ago when the setting used had a lower window-sill for Bad Girl to browse over as she waited for her mistress—of the play—to recognize her presence and offer her sugar.

• • • •

This low window-sill almost ruined one act. Bad Girl saw Miss Reed tuck the bag of sugar underneath a ruffle just inside. She stepped calmly over the low sill and, as the actors with their backs turned were going through a dramatic moment, they were startled by a roar of laughter sweeping over the audience. Miss Reed turned her head quickly, saw the cause and "ad-libbed" until she could get the horse into a less conspicuous position.

Social Programs Called 'Snooty'

Workers Can Handle Own Leisure Time, Declares Professor.

Philadelphia, May 12 (U.P.).—Working people don't welcome the condescension of social workers who want to make their spare time "profitable," according to Prof. Harry A. Overstreet, instructor at the College of the City of New York.

Prof. Overstreet denounced programs to guide people in the use of leisure time as "snooty."

"All this talk about leisure time and methods of helping working people to spend it profitably is a very high-hat kind of business, and decidedly snooty," he said in a talk here.

"Left to themselves, they are quite capable of spending their spare time as well as anyone else."

Naturally people don't want others to "teach" them how to have a good time, said Prof. Overstreet, and added he didn't blame them.

"It isn't much fun to be told how to enjoy yourself, especially by some one who looks and acts superior," he said. "Working people know how to have a good time, and they ask no advice from people who don't work."

Italian Nuns in 15th Century First Made Needlepoint Lace

OLD LACE . . . the words call to mind all that is patrician and exquisite in the realm of fashion from the fifteenth century down to the present day.

It is to the patient nuns of Italy we owe the beauty of needlepoint lace. They spent long, placid hours in quiet convent gardens creating this delicate fabric. But these peaceful days were short-lived.

The rise in popularity of needlepoint lace was phenomenal. Soon the inmates of every convent were not only turning every spare moment into making lace, but they were teaching the art to their lay sisters.

Some of the lovely old needlepoint of this period was so fragile and fine, that a magnifying glass was necessary to discern the individual threads.

Lace, under the name of "lacis," had been known in France from the time of the proud Catherine de Medici, who trimmed her gowns with it lavishly, but it was not until the time of Louis XIV, the age of splendor and grandeur in all arts, that French lace began to rival that of Italy. A school was started in Alencon, organized by Italian teachers. It was here French lace began to be manufactured on a large scale. This lace, some of the loveliest the world has ever known, was called Point d'Alencon.

The story of lace is closely woven with history. To know old lace is to learn the most thrilling and colorful chapters in the pages of human events. English lace, for instance, had its origin when the persecution of the Protestants in France drove the Huguenots to England. They brought with them their highly developed arts of silk weaving and lace making. These French lace makers settled in Devonshire, where they developed English lace to its best designs and finest texture.

Irish lace, while some of it is very fine, is more or less a recent adventure and as yet hasn't shown much individuality or originality. The patterns are, for the most part, copied from other countries.

Posies Bloom On Smartest Paris Frocks

Floral prints are everywhere. The Paris dressmakers seem unable to get enough of them to satisfy their desire for gay, picturesque clothes. New York designers and shops are sponsoring figured materials at a time when they usually settle down to plain, placid surfaces. And every Washington shop resembles a flower garden, so full is it of blooming dresses.

Just as fashionable as printed fabrics are embroidered ones. The embroidered figures are flowers—of course—and are invariably small. Clover blossoms, violets, buttercups or rosebuds in natural colors are scattered all over pastel organza. These materials are best for the very young. They are much too ingenuous for sophisticated women of fashion.

When the saturation point in floral prints has been reached, one may choose from flocks of checks, plaids and intriguing geometric designs woven into thin fabrics. Mousseline de soie covered with large yellow and gray squares is striking when whipped up into a long-lined dinner or cocktail dress. Frocks of this type may be found in Washington shops, along with bizarre, striped affairs bound to create a sensation wherever they go.

The grand thing about these prints, floral or otherwise, is that they go so beautifully with wagon-wheel hats. And the woman who doesn't have at least one huge hat this summer might just as well hibernate in her own room until the fall styles come in. The only fashion that equals the present big hat vogue is the rage for prints.

Radio Excellent Woman's Field Survey Shows

Insurance, Dentistry, Medicine, Advertising Also Rank High.

THE young woman building a career for herself today has her best opportunity in the fields of radio, insurance, dentistry, or medicine, according to a survey just completed by the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

Advertising and promotion as well as ownership and management also offer fairly good opportunities to women, Miss Mary Anderson, director of the bureau, learned through the Nation-wide study.

Banking and finance offer a limited chance, while nursing, secretarial and general office work are definitely overcrowded, the survey revealed. Journalism, though closed at present, is likely, with improved conditions, to have openings for women, especially on small town papers. Although aviation and public office offer little opportunity now, it is believed they will be fairly fertile fields as business increases throughout the country.

The survey, which also shows to what extent age and marriage cause discrimination against women, was undertaken at the request of the National Federation of Business and Profession Women's Clubs.

Twenty thousand members of the federation cooperated in making the study by answering queries about their own opportunities, advancements and difficulties.

All Types Included.

"Though the women who took part in the survey might be regarded as a picked group, their experiences may be taken as representative," said Miss Anderson when she announced the results of the study. "Women in 47 States and the District of Columbia, in all types of communities from small towns to metropolitan centers, answered questionnaires. The period chosen included 1930, 1931 and a short time prior to those years. This period was considered more representative of normal conditions than of dark depression days."

America is far from the land of golden opportunity for business and professional women, the survey revealed. At least half of the women queried were earning annually $1,625 or less. One fourth of the total number earned less than $1,210; one-fourth earned more than $2,075; only one-eighth had an income of $2,500 or more.

Physicians had highest earnings, saleswomen the lowest. Incomes of single women were on a higher level than those of married ones. College graduates filled the highest salary brackets. Women with normal school educations filled the lowest brackets. Earnings increased with experience and with age, up to 60 years.

"The survey proves the fallacy of the argument that a woman should be paid less than a man because she has no dependents to support," declared Miss Anderson. "Almost 9,000 of the women who took part in the study had some one for whose support they were entirely or partially responsible. Most of those business and professional women assumed their obligations early in their careers and will probably carry them during the majority of their employed years."

Mature Women Studied.

Two-fifths of the women studied were in clerical occupations. About 36 per cent were in different professions, approximately 13 per cent were in trades, while the remainder were scattered among domestic and personal service, public service, transportation and communication, agricultural or mining pursuits.

The women who took part in the survey formed a mature group, with the age average at 39½ years, while more than a fifth were 50 years or more old.

Out of this mature group only 408 of the 18,000 who answered the query on the subject said they had been discriminated against because they were considered too old for a job. Two-fifths of the 408 were in clerical work, about a third were teachers, approximately 5 per cent were saleswomen, and almost 4 per cent were nurses.

Six thousand married women took part in the survey. About one-fifth of that number claimed they had been discriminated against because they were married.

Saleswomen, in the lowest salaried group, are able to earn more when they branch out and train for other positions besides selling, the study showed.

Up to the end of 1930 more than a third of the women who had made a change in employment did so because they had a chance to get better jobs.

Crime Is Foreseen if Schools Don't Prepare Students Better

NEW YORK, May 12 (Spl.).—Either we must have schools today or build jails tomorrow, Dr. George J. Ryan, president of the Board of Education, told a group of educators here today.

The educators met to begin a movement to repair the damage of the depression in schools in the United States.

"Unless the school system is capable of preparing young people for the leisure of tomorrow, as well as for the vocation, the country will pay for the neglect tenfold and over in crime, debility and human waste," Dr. Ryan said.

"You can patiently wait for national recovery to restore normal activity in almost every other field, but you dare not permit millions of school children to grow up either physically or mentally starved," Joseph Miller, jr., president of the Association of Public School Business Officials, asserted.

"Nothing offered in later years can fill the void caused by malnutrition of mind or body during the tender formative years of the growing child," he said.

"For the best interests of humanity the backward march of education must be halted. Our Nation can survive only so long as we are true to the basic ideals of education. We can not be loyal to our Nation if we suffer our schools to be destroyed any further."

Dr. Harold G. Campbell, superintendent of schools, said educators have been "shocked to witness the enormous toll that education has had to pay on the battlefields of the present economic depression."

"The heroism of the American teachers in their efforts to save education from the horrors of this economic war can never be fully recorded," Dr. Campbell concluded.

Odd Legal Tangle Follows Discovery 'Dead' Veteran Lives

U. S. Government and Virginia Bank Involved in Suit Over War Risk Insurance Paid "Widow" of Soldier Obtaining Loan.

Bristol, Va., May 13 (Spl.).—The strangest case in his legal career was reported yesterday by Judge Robert L. Pennington. It involved collection of a war-risk insurance policy upon proof the former soldier was dead and subsequent developments showing that the former veteran is alive and that parties linked with collection under his policy can not be prosecuted because of the statute of limitations.

The Government, other avenues of recourse exhausted, has sued the Lee Bank & Trust Co., of St. Charles, for $1,400 and interest since 1926, because the bank allegedly cashed the check sent to the veteran's "widow."

Judge John Paul, in Federal court at Big Stone Gap, will pass on the case within the next 30 days.

Dewey Milton, of Harlan County, Ky., enlisted in the Army, Judge Pennington recounted, being finally discharged in 1922. His enlistment showed he was married to Anne Britton and that they were separated, and she was listed as his beneficiary.

In 1924 the Government received a request, allegedly from Milton, for his war-risk certificate, and Federal testimony in the case showed that a certificate was mailed to him at Martin's Fork, Ky., after fingerprints on the application had been checked with his enlistment prints.

A year later, Judge Pennington said, the Government was informed by a person signing her name as Anne Milton and claiming to be Dewey Milton's wife, that Milton was dead and asking that his war-risk policy be paid her.

A short time later the Government was sent copies of records from the Kentucky bureau of vital statistics at Frankfort that Milton was dead. The records were attested to by a doctor and an assistant undertaker and the place of burial was given as Hagan, in Lee County, Va.

The Government sent a check for $1,483 to "Mrs. Dewey Milton." Evidence showed the check was allegedly indorsed by "Anne Milton" and "Moore Milton," father of Dewey Milton, and deposited to the credit of Delora Milton, another relative of Dewey Milton, in the bank at St. Charles.

The case rested from 1926, when the check was paid, until five years later when the Government received a letter from Dewey Milton asking that a war-risk insurance policy be sent to him. After informing Milton he was dead, according to their records, Government agents investigated and found he was alive, in good health, and living at Martin's Fork, Ky.

The Government consequently loaned him $700 and instituted suit against the bank because it cashed a check allegedly fraudulently indorsed.

Anne Milton testified at the trial that she knew nothing about the matter, and Milton declared that he had received no part of the money and had not placed his fingerprints on the war-risk policy application sent to the Government in 1924.

The bank claimed it had cause to believe in the integrity of Delora Milton because she kept an account at the institution that averaged $1,800 before the Government check was placed to her credit and for two years thereafter. The bank also charged the Government's negligence, instead of the bank's, had caused the unusual tangle.

Rites Mark First English Colonization

Jamestown Island Is Site of Service to Honor Pioneers.

Gov. Peery and Staff Attend, Commemorate Nation's Birth.

Jamestown Island, Va., May 13 (AP).—The 327th anniversary of the founding of the mother colony of of English speaking people in the New World was observed here today.

Wearing a white carnation in honor of his mother, Gov. Peery was among the hundreds at the simple religious services which marked the passage of another year since the Sarah Constant, the Godspeed and the Discovery found safe anchorage in the James River and the first permanent English settlement was founded.

With the Governor were Mrs. Peery and their children, his personal aide, Col. John W. Williams, Brig. Gen. S. Gardner Waller, and other members of his staff.

With the Right Rev. A. C. Thomson, bishop of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, and Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, rector of Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg, they prayed for continuing growth and strength of the Nation.

In his service Bishop Thomson used the same scripture read to the 105 Cavaliers when they landed May 13, 1607, by Good Master Robert Hunt.

Capt. John Smith, savior of the colony on more than one occasion, described the scene in his writing by saying:

"I well remember wee did hang an awning (which is an old saile) to three or four trees to shadow us from the sunne, our walles were railes of wood, our seats unhewed three, till we cut plankets; our pulpit a bar of wood sailed to two neighboring trees; in foule weather we shifted into an old rotten tent; we had few better, and this dame by way of adventure for new. Wee had daily common prayer, morning and evening; every Sunday two sermons and every three months the holy communion."

Recalls First Service.

The scene of that first service was pictured by Dr. Goodwin who, during today's services, spoke briefly on the history of this island where a new nation was born.

As a reminder of the Jamestown massacre—or friendly friendly Princess Pocahontas—a small group of Pamunkey Indians in native regalia milled through the crowds.

In contrast to the echoes from an unexplored forest, electric amplifiers carried the services to the hundreds who could not find room in the old Jamestown church where the ceremony was held. Likewise in contrast to the staunch little sailing ships, a trim white excursion boat bore a passenger list of picnickers today.

At the conclusion of the religious services, a group of college glee clubs brought to a climax their participation in the music festival at the college of William and Mary with a program of old religious songs at the Robert Hunt shrine.

Dr. Goodwin reminded visitors that it was here that the Indian Princess Pocohontas, daughter of the mighty Chief Powhatan, came as a child, after saving Capt. John Smith's lift, to be baptized at the font in the old church, the tower of which still stands. It was here that she married John Rolfe, an English gentleman.

First Legislature Held.

It was here that the first legislative assembly ever held in the new world was convened by Sir George Yeardly in 1619. It was here that some of the most stirring events of Bacon's rebellion occurred.

The services today were directed by the association for the preservation of Virginia antiquities. Miss Ellen Bagby, of Richmond, is chairman of the Jamestown committee.

At the conclusion of the exercises the association presented the governor with a book "The Site of Jamestown."

The association through its activities has saved the more historic part of the island from the ravages of time and erosion from the River tides, and has preserved 22½ acres of the island.

Now the Federal Government is including the remainder as a part of the Colonal National Monument, embracing Jamestown, Williamsburg and Yorktown. The monument is being developed by the National Park Service.

Hard Winter Gets Dead-Shad Blame

Norfolk, Va., May 13 (Spl.).—Fishing experts today were seeking the cause for the finding of so many dead shad in Potomac River during the past ten days.

W. H. Gary, fish inspector of this district, said one reason why the shad might have been killed was the probable unhealthy condition of the river owing to the extreme cold of last winter. The Potomac was frozen over during a good portion of the winter and the water, it is claimed, might have become unduly polluted with refuse from the shore lines because of the freeze.

The waters, too, might have been too cold for the shad who were apparently in a hurry to find suitable spots for spawning. Mr. Gary said the death of so many shad, especially the roe variety, was a serious setback to the fishing industry.

Harvard Head Asks 'Worthy' Scholarships

Associated Clubs Hear That Working Through College Is Hardship.

Hot Springs, Va., May 13 (AP).—Urging a wider use of scholarships for worthy students, President James B. Conant of Harvard University told the thirty-fifth annual meeting of Associated Harvard Clubs here last night that it seemed a mistake to require students to work their way through college.

"At present," he said, "it is extremely difficult for a student to work his way through college. * * * It takes his physical strength and may break his morale. It is a social waste."

The Harvard president said that the university eventually hoped to have such scholarship funds that 10 per cent of each entering class may be given scholarships sufficient to carry promising students through college.

Next fall, he said, Harvard will start a new prize fellowship plan with five to ten selected schoolboys from the group of States embracing Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The Harvard president told the alumni meeting that intellectual liberty must be preserved. "We must keep in mind," he said, "that some time there may be a swing of some political or economic force which will threaten the very existence of the institutions of higher learning. The danger may be that universities will be curtailed and limited by pressure of one sort or another.

"It is essential to a university that the atmosphere be absolutely free—that professors be entitled to investigate what they consider the most important subjects and that they be allowed to express freely the truth as they see it. American universities have a great heritage of freedom. Academic liberty is of the greatest importance."

Virginia Drink Purchase Still Slow Process

When Sales Will Actually Start Remains One Dark Secret.

By J. K. Irving, Jr.

Charlottesville, Va., May 13.—It was on March 22 that Virginia became potentially a seller of wines and liquors.

It may be that in a few days one will be able to begin at the the first State liquor store in Richmond to negotiate the purchase of a bottle of legal stuff for the cellarette. How long the operation of placing it there beside remains from the bootlegger's last trip will take none can say; time must tell.

But we were speaking of time. It is remembered that during the recent session of the Virginia General Assembly there was much rejoicing over the discovery that former Gov. Pollard had failed to include in his budget estimate the State's probable revenue from the sale of liquor prior to the end of the fiscal year. Some thought it might total as much at $500,000. Most citizens now consider it decidedly wise in Dr. Pollard to ignore this source of possible revenue despite the fact that it would have helped to place a much rosier tint upon the rather somber-hued document he turned over to Gov. Peery.

Just a Few Rules.

However well the State stores may work, one thing is quite sure—that the great meed of praise will come from the sorrowing prohibitionists and not from the old timer, who was wont to name his "pizen" and thereby conclude a happy transaction.

According to the Richmond press this is what you must do to become possessed of Virginia's wet stock in trade:

Choose your brand from a list posted on the wall; list wants on special slip of paper (clerk may answer civil questions, but must not recommend any particular brand; make out order and hand to clerk who takes payment and rings same up on register; register disgorges two tickets, one a gummed sticker and the other receipt which customer signs; receipt contains following words: "I am permitted under the ABC act to make this purchase;" gummed sticker is attached to bottle; clerk wraps up parcel and customer is free to depart. Almost as simple as obtaining a passport clear through the U. S. S. R.

You Name the Date.

Senator George W. Layman, Virginia's own Volstead, is apparently highly pleased with the ABC board's binding of red tape and with its low-geared progress, for he says:

"This is a serious undertaking in which haste might be fatal. It is important that the ground work of the control system should be well laid. This the board is doing. There is no reason for it to hurry."

So, those inclined to potter with the laws of chance, probability and possibility may add the time from March 22 to "X," time of opening State stores, to "Y," length of time required to go through the process of purchasing and be able to tell you approximately how long it takes to get a bottle of legal whisky in the Old Dominion. Incidentally, the price and quality, as compared with those of the bootlegger, are to be considered by the prospective consumer. But that is another equation.

U. S. Air Mail Service Assured for Roanoke

Roanoke, Va., May 13 (Spl.).—The Chamber of Commerce has been informed by Representative C. A. Woodrum that air-mail service for Roanoke is definitely assured, and that bids for a route from either Newark, N. J., or Washington, southward by way of Roanoke, will be opened on May 25.

An American Airways representative has been here making a survey of facilities at the local airport. Woodrum reported on the route after conferences with authorities in Washington, he said.

Six Virginia High Pupils Win Awards

Fincastle's Team Gets Debate Championship at Charlottesville.

Suffolk and Lynchburg Students Rank First in Their Contests.

By Howard Turner.

Charlottesville, Va., May 13.—Six State championship literary awards were received by Virginia high school students who emerged victorious in contests, sponsored by the Virginia High School Literary and Athletic League.

It was estimated by Charles H. Kauffman, executive secretary of the league, the more than 6,000 high school boys and girls started in the elimination contests in their own schoolsd before the 1,000 successful boys and girls came to the University of Virginia this week-end for the final contests.

The debating team of Fincastle High School, composed of Elbert Hartless and Elbert Turner, won the championship debating award from John Thornton and Walter Gottschalk, of Salem High School.

Affirmative Wins.

The question of debate was "Resolved, That the counties of Virginia should adopt the county executive form of government provided in the optional forms act of 1932." The affirmative won.

The girls' State public speaking championship award was won by Miss Anne Cross, of Suffolk High School. Miss Gertrude Levy, of Newport News High, was runner-up.

Stanford Schewell, of E. C. Glass High School, Lynchburg, won the boys' championship from Harold Yates, of Lane High School, Charlottesville.

The girls' public speaking award went to Miss Edith Culpepper, of George Washington High School, Danville. Miss Page Moffatt, Stuarts Draft High School, was second.

Spelling Award Divided.

The spelling award for the State championship was divided between John Manahan, of Lane High School, Charlottesville, and Miss Patria Gibson, of Wytheville High School. This contest ended in a tie.

In naming the Virginia State high schools who received first awards for the greatest achievements during the past year, Jefferson Senior High School, of Roanoke, was chosen to lead the class A group; Lane High School, Charlottesville, for class B, and Triplett High School, Mount Jackson, class C champion.

The excellence of the dramatic productions in the play competitions in this year's contests was considered one of the highlights of a successful session of the Virginia literary and athletic league contests. This contest was won by the George Washington High School dramatic group of Danville, under the direction of J. Howard Kalk.

Krol Granted New Fund Theft Trial

Winchester, Va., May 13 (AP).—Max Krol, former textile executive, recently sentenced to six years imprisonment on charges of embezzling company funds, has been granted a stay of sentence until June 20, under a corporation court order.

Defense counsel claimed it had not sufficient time to complete the record for application for an appeal. Khol recently was released on $5,000 bail. He was arrested nearly a year ago in Chicago, after skipping $5,000 bail in New York, where he was being held for extradition proceedings.

Good morning! We knew that $2.65 would be a popular price for a straw hat. Everybody knows that it is especially popular if it buys a $3.50 hat. And that is exactly what's what here today. There's plenty of variety in these straw hats, too.

Paulino Holds Max Schmeling to Draw in Bloody 12-Round Battle

Veteran Foe Surprises German

Rushes Max at Start to Gain Lead as 30,000 Watch Struggle.

Spaniard Cut Over Eyes in Late Rounds; Draw Blow to Teuton.

BARCELONA, Spain, May 13.—Max Schmeling's dream of recapturing the world heavyweight championship was shattered today when the German Dempsey was held to a 12-round draw by blood-spattered old Paulino Uzcudun, the Basque woodchopper, whose defeat in 1929 sent Schmeling soaring toward championship heights.

More than 30,000 fans, including president companys of Catalonia, saw the durable 35-year-old Paulino gamely stand off the former champion.

The bout featured Barcelona's annual "boxing festival" it was preceded by 30 other fights of four rounds each. There were three rings. The boxing started in the huge Mont Juich Stadium at 11 a. m. Paulino and Schmeling started at 5:50. Both were given a tremendous ovation.

Paulino Rushes Foe.

Paulino rushed from his corner at the opening gong and tore after Maxie, slugging savagely with both hands at the German's head and body. Schmeling tried to jab him away, but the Basque's elbow defense shook off most of Maxie's counters.

After the first round, Schmeling was more accurate. He matched blows with Uzcudun, doing considerable damage at long range. As the Basque tried to rush in, in the eighth, Schmeling stepped in with a whistling right hook that slashed Paulino's left brow. It was a deep gash. Poulino continued his body attack.

In the ninth a long, straight right gashed the Basque's left cheek. Paulino bled profusely. Schmeling also was smeared, and some of the ringside correspondents were spattered.

Despite handicaps, Paulino attacked wildly. Schmeling shook most of the blows and tried to beat the Basque back with counter punches. Both men were in excellent condition and fought to the final bell without showing fatigue.

Decision Is Applauded.

Many spectators thought Schmeling had a slight advantage but the draw decision was applauded loudly.

Schmeling weighed 187; Uzcudun, 208.

Nats to Send Klumpp and Filley Away

Crowder Will Pitch in Game Today With Sorrell as Rival.

By Frank H. Young.

CATCHER ELMER KLUMPP and Pitcher Mark Filley will be sent away and Infielder Johnny Kerr will be transferred to a coaching role in order that the Nats may get down to a 23-player limit, which is necessary by midnight tomorrow. Klumpp will be returned to Chattanooga, but on 24-hour option, while Filley goes to Albany, Clark Griffith, Nat owner, stated last night.

"This catching proposition worries me," said Griffith, "for neither Berg nor Sewell is available now because of injuries, leaving only Phillips. I'd put Sewell on the voluntary retired list but for the fact that it would keep him out for 60 days, and I know he'll be ready long before that. Should anything happen to Phillips, I guess Berg could limp about behind the plate until I could get Klumpp back."

Sewell, by the way, showed up at the stadium yesterday with a metal splint in the palm of his hand and with his injured finger bound around it so that he can get it in the habit of bending.

The second game of the Tiger series and the next to last of this home stay of the Nats will be played this afternoon. General Al Crowder, who not only has been worrying about not having his fast ball but also by the serious illness of his wife, will pitch for the home team. Mickey Cochrane likely will turn over the Tiger assignment to Vic Sorrell.

Cecil Travis probably will not be ready for regular third-base work for a week, Manager Joe Cronin admitted yesterday. He was withdrawn from Saturday's opening game in the eighth because he complained of dizziness, and was rested up yesterday.

Ralph (Red) Kress reported to the Nats yesterday, and was most enthusiastic over the shift in clubs. "I figure I'm with a pennant winner," he said, "and the chance of getting a cut of that world series melon is plenty encouragement to make me step out if I get a chance."

Although the schedule shows the Nats have an open date Wednesday, before opening their first Western invasion the following day in Cleveland, Owner Griffith has booked an exhibition game in Cincinnati with the Reds on that day.

Golf Pairs Even In 10-Year Play

Atlanta, May 13 (AP).—After squaring off against each other at least once a week for the past 10 years, golfing twosomes composed of Frank Reynolds, Fred Phillips, Hugh Moses and Claude Chappell decided to check up on team standings.

Their cards, carefully kept through the years, showed that Reynolds and Phillips, partners, playing Moses and Chappell, completed a decade of battling all square. Out of 520 engagements each had won an even 260. So they decided to continue the competition for another 10 years, at the end of which another accounting will be made in an effort to determine the winning pair.

PITTSBURGH, May 13 (AP).—Nearing the end of a home stay of almost three weeks, the Pittsburgh Pirates rose to first place in the National League today by defeating the Boston Braves, 9 to 2, before 14,000 fans.

Although hit safely 11 times, including three hits in three times at bat for Urbanski, Hal Smith was never in danger except in the fifth, when the Braves combined two doubles and a triple for their two runs. He fanned six.

Cincinnati, May 13 (AP).—The Phillies spotted the Reds four runs and then beat them, 5 to 4, in a 10-inning contest today.

Eph Allen, former Cincinnati player, tied the score with a home run in the ninth. Then Chiozza hit a freak two-bagger which scored Haslin, who had singled, in the next frame.

Cincinnati piled up its lead in the third, fourth and fifth innings, a triple by Bottomley and a home run by Chick Hafey accounting for two runs in the fifth. Philadelphia began chipping away at the lead with a run in the seventh and two in the eighth.

Winchester Defeats Martinsburg, 15 to 7

Martinsburg, W. Va., May 13.—The Wichester and Martinsburg, Blue Ridge League clubs staged a slug fest here this afternoon with Winchester emerging the winner by 15-7 score. The combatants divided 32 hits between them. Winchester getting 18 and the losers 14.

It was Martinsburg's first loss in three league starts. Bother teams used three pitchers and none of them revealed any effectiveness. Martinsburg came within one run of trying the count in the fifth, but could not follow up and the Virginians went on to score nine runs in the last three frames.

Hill, of Hartinsburg led both teams in batting, getting four singles in five times at bat. Edwards contributed a homer with none aboard.

Gomez Hurls Shutout for Yankees

Routs Cleveland, 8 to 0; Gehrig and Chapman Bat 4 Runs Each.

NEW YORK, May 13 (AP).—Lefty Gomez pitched superbly to win his fifth straight mound victory by the shutout route today, and Lou Gehrig and Ben Chapman backed him up by driving in four runs apiece. As a result of this fine teamwork the Yankees tightened their hold on the American League lead by walloping Cleveland, 8 to 0, in the first game of their series.

Gehrig's contribution was his eighth home run of the season and his sixth in eight days. It was a mighty wallop off Lefty Lloyd Brown's delivery with the bases full in the first inning.

Chapman Slugs Homer.

Chapman handled the rest of the run-getting job with two triples and a home run. He smacked his first three-bagger with two aboard in the second inning; drove in another tally with a triple in the fourth, and wound up by getting a homer inside the park when he tore around the bases after connecting with one of Thornton Lee's pitches in the seventh.

Gomez fanned only five Cleveland batters, a low mark for him, but he granted only four singles, two by Billy Knickerbocker, one walk, and kept the Indians popping the ball into the air all afternoon.

As a result of his work the Yanks tied one fielding record and threatened another. The club had only one assist, that one going to Frank Crosetti when he threw out Spencer in the seventh, and Gehrig, at first, had only the one putout. The assist record is held by many clubs, while two first basemen, A. B. McCauley, of Washington, in 1891, and John (Bud) Clancy, of Chicago White Sox, in 1930, played full games without having a fielding chance.

Babe Ruth Injured.

Nats Win, 7 to 4, On Rally in 7th

inning, a single into left that scored Kuhel with run No. 6.

Up until the seventh, Ray Hayworth, the catcher who substituted for Cochrane, had kept the Tigers in the ball game, driving in all three runs Detroit had scored off Whitehill, who paved the way for his own departure by starting the Tigers off in their half of the seventh with a pair of passes.

Heinie Manush was the pivotal figure in establishing the Nats in a 1-0 lead at the outset when he followed Myer's walk with a single into right field. Cronin scored Myer from third with a long fly to center.

The Tigers got that run back to tie the score in the fifth on Rogell's single, a sacrifice and Hayworth's one-base sock into left, but Whitehill, who had been pitching tolerably good ball developed a wild streak in the seventh. He passed Gehringer and Rogell with none out, saw them sacrificed along by Greenberg, and then saw Hayworth drive 'em both home with a single past Bluege.

That 3-1 lead stood up very briefly, however. The Nats came in from the field, and with the help of Bridges, piled up those six runs that took the competition out of the ball game. Jack Russell allowed the Tigers a run in the eighth on three successive singles after two were out, but it didn't matter much.

Japan and China Split In Far East Olympics

Manila, May 13 (AP).—Preliminaries of the Sino-Japanese sports "war" in the Far Eastern Olympics were even today with Japan victorious at baseball in the second day of the event and China winning at volley ball.

Japan's baseball team pounded the ball to all corners to defeat China, 20 to 1, but the Chinese evened matters by winning three sets to two at volley ball.

Last night China had swamped Japan in the opening basket ball game by a 42-to-27 score to avenge a clean sweep by Japan in the preliminaries of the tennis competition.

Red Sox Win by 14-2 In Argy of Home Runs

Boston, May 13 (AP).—Three home runs, two of them with the bases loaded, contributed heavily today to a 14-to-2 victory for the Boston Red Sox over the Chicago White Sox before 15,000 fans at Fenway Park.

Bucky Walters, Boston third baseman, accounted for two of the homers. His first was off Gaston in the second inning after the latter had passed three batters with none out. The second came in the seventh inning off Heving, with none out and one man on base.

BEFORE YOU BUY any piano, see the uprights and grands which have outsold every other piano made in America during the last 60 years. The Kimball has made this record because it has always been the world's best piano value. You can trust the makers of Kimball pianos because for 76 years the reputation of the company has never been questioned—nothing but fine quality, excellent value and dependable service could have made the Kimball the most widely used among the world's famous pianos. See it first. It is an excellent guide as to both piano quality and price, representing as it does the national standard in piano value. The Kimball is sold in Washington exclusively at the manufacturer's own store at factory authorized prices and on payment terms so reasonable most anyone can easily acquire one of these superior pianos.

Walt Mason, Himself

Always a Loser.

There's no refuge for the sinner, there's no haven that's secure; in the end the law's the winner, that is certain, that is sure. O'er the wires the tale goes flashing of the sinful deeds he's done, of the phoney check he's cashing, of his misdeeds with a gun. Forty thousand cops are looking for his traces everywhere, only waiting to be hooking their fierce talons in his hair. To the jungle land proceeding, he may look for safety there, but the Hottentots are reading his description everywhere. Though the information's meager they set forth with one accord, for the Hottentots are eager for the advertised reward. They will do without their dinner and desert their huts and tents, to arrest the noted sinner, who will net them 50 cents. If the sinner goes pirooting in the weary waste of snow, he will hear the warning hooting of the cagy Eskimo. And the native cops will rubber, through the frozen wastes they'll look, they'll forsake the meal of blubber for a chance to nail a crook. Everywhere the law is botching all the schemes the sinner frames; everywhere there's waitful watching to upset his choicest games. It is wiser, it is better to observe, in this our town, both the spirit and the letter of the law as written down.

Rain, Snow Promise End To Drought In Mid-West

Clouds Forecast Further Precipitation to Aid Dwarfed Plants.

Eastern Slope of Rockies Is Blanketed by Snowfall.

Chicago, May 13 (AP).—Rains and snow combined today to give the sun-parched Midwest promise of the end of the severe drought that for weeks caused terrific damage to crops.

The rains—drizzles in some sections, downpours in others—were more or less general in the drought area. Agricultural experts said that the precipitation aided the dwarfed crops but more rain was imperative to bring permanent improvement. Clouds and forecasts of rain gave farmers cheer.

The eastern slope of the Rockies, from the Canadian border almost to the Mexican line, was treated to a generous helping of snow today.

The first snow was reported last night from Montana and the storm soon swept Southward until it engulfed Wyoming, Colorado and Northern New Mexico.

Moisture Badly Needed.

While Colorado officials said drought conditions in that State had not yet become critical, the moisture was badly needed for the sugar beet crop.

Snow also fell for an hour in the territory at Scotts Bluff, Nebr., melting as it hit the ground. It brought a half inch of moisture to the beet fields which had been showing signs of an uneven stand.

Elsewhere in Nebraska, cool and damp weather prevailed after thundershowers yesterday. At Sterling 1½ inches of rain fell and today there were showers over large portions of the State.

Iowa had scattered showers but dustitorms were reported again at Sioux City and Cherokee. Charles Reed, meteorologist, said yesterday's rains in Iowa were sufficient to assure germination of corn and would help the oats crop. Two men were killed in the State by lightning.

State Rain General.

In Wisconsin rain was general throughout the State, ranging from 1 inch. Minnesota and parts of South Dakota also had light rains but not sufficient to give permanent relief from the six weeks dry spell. There were a few scattered showers, none heavy, in Illinois.

Agricultural observers agreed that the rains were a help to the crops, but so far were just stopgaps pending further necessary heavy rains if crops were to be aided materially.

A. E. Anderson, the State-Federal crops statistician in Nebraska, said much wheat would do "surprisingly well" now if soaking rains followed the showers of yesterday and today.

Gangs Raided In Gettle Case

House-to-House Search Is Planned for Today.

Los Angeles, May 13 (AP).—Eager for action, police swooped down tonight upon every known gangster hangout in Los Angeles, seeking a clew to the kidnaping of William F. Gettle, and prepared to join tomorrow in a 5,000-man house-to-house hunt for the "snatch" gang.

The raids came after authorities granted a personal appeal by Mrs. Fleta Gettle, invalid wife of the abducted Beverly Hills millionaire, to continue a "truce" with the kidnapers. Police made a systematic search of the underworld hangouts and questioned suspicious characters.

Federal, county and city officers prepared for the concentration of 5,000 men. Planes of the sheriff's volunteer air force scanned the terrain from Mexico border to Los Angeles.

Mrs. Gettle's appeal was interpreted by officers to indicate the family was in direct contact with the kidnapers and negotiating for the payment of $75,000 ransom.

The truce, under which officers agreed not to interfere with the family's activities was to have ended at midnight. It was extended until noon tomorrow.

Police Save Slayers From Mob Vengeance

Ottawa, Ill., May 13 (AP).—Spirited away from a crowd that threatened to lynch them, three youths, said by Sheriff E. J. Welter to have confessed the slaying of a Dana (Ill.) grocer during an attempted robbery, were under heavy guard here tonight.

The youths were Vincent Okaren, 20, Rockdale; Joseph Kowalezyk, 16, and his brother, Walter, 18, of Morris. They previously were inmates of the St. Charles School for Boys.

Wife of Doctor Free in Kidnap Suspect Killing

Fears Expressed Life of Mrs. Muench May Be Endangered.

St. Louis, May 13 (AP).—Mrs. Nellie Tipton Muench, St. Louis physician's wife under indictment for the 1931 kidnaping of Dr. Isaac D. Kelley, was arrested and placed in jail for "safekeeping" today but released several hours later under order of the Missouri Supreme Court.

The prosecutor's office expressed fears for Mrs. Muench's life following the machine-gun killing Saturday of John C. Johnson, colored, one of five men indicted with her for the kidnaping. Johnson and Mrs. Muench, accused "finger woman" in the case, has been the only defendants to win their freedom on bond.

Mrs. Muench had been free several weeks under $50,000 bond. The Supreme Court placed her bond at $25,000 and found there was no reason for holding her in view of the fact a lower court previously had given her freedom under bond.

Meanwhile county officers made a vain effort to identify two men who drove to the home of a deputy sheriff, fired a volley of shots from a machine gun at Johnson, and fled in a motor car.

Adolph Fielder, whose statement to a newspaper led to indictments in the Kelley kidnaping, was reported in hiding tonight.

"It might be a good idea for me to put a few miles between myself and St. Louis," he was quoted by friends. Fielder, in his statement, admitted knowledge of the Kelley kidnaping, but denied personal implication. He named all those under indictment.

Johnson's body was pierced by five bullets. As the gunmen fled, one fired three revolver shots at relatives of Deputy Harry D. Newbold, at whose home Johnson had

Girl, Beaten to Death, Found in 'Frisco Park

San Francisco, May 13 (AP).—A well-dressed, red-haired young woman of striking appearance was found slain today in Golden Gate Park. She had been attacked and strangled with her own belt. Her skull had been crushed.

Police found written in one of her shoes the name "Louise Jeppesen," and the name "Louise" carved on the back of a small watch she wore. A diamond engagement ring was found on her hand.

Bert Acosta Jailed Again On Intoxication Charge

Mineola, N. Y., May 13 (U.P.).—Bert Acosta is in jail again. The playboy pilot who won fame as a member of the Byrd transatlantic flight in 1927 and who has been in frequent conflict with the law since then—always on minor charges—was sentenced to three months in Nassau County Jail on a charge of public intoxication after his automobile overturned.

Mrs. Roosevelt Is Greeted On Mother's Day

President's Mother Paid Honor by 5 Former First Ladies.

New York, May 13 (AP).—Widows of five former Presidents sent Mother's Day greetings tonight to Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, at a banquet of the World Peaceways, where she was the guest of honor.

The messages, together with one from her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, were among a large basket of telegrams she received from me nand women in every walk of life.

Peace Offered By Ibn Saud

United Empire Is Goal of Warring Monarch; Troops Wait Peace.

Cairo, Egypt, May 13 (AP).—A truce was concluded in the Arabian war today as King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia offered peace conditions to the Imam Yahya of Yemen, whose territory he has invaded.

Terms of the proposed peace treaty were not revealed in dispatches which told of the cessation of fighting in the territory between the captured seaport of Hodeidah and Sana, the capital of Yemen, against which King Ibn Saud's troops were reported moving in the latest prevoius messages from the war zone.

King Ibn Saud ordered his troops to cease their campaign until he has received the reply of the Iman to his proposals.

The armistice between King Ibn Saud and the Imam Yahya found the former's troops in possession of a considerable portion of the territory of Yemen, the little country in southwest Arabia which had remained independent of both Saudian and European control.

King Ibn Saud, who changed the name of his country from "The Combined Kingdoms of Nejd and Hejaz" to Saudy Arabia a year ago, had been represented by his countrymen in Europe as determined to add Yemen to his domain and create a united Arabian empire.

Trotzky Said to Have Entered Switzerland

Annecy, France, May 13 (AP).—After spending two days in this town in southeastern France, Leon Trotzky, it was reported tonight, crossed the Swiss frontier in the neighborhood of Vallorince.

The Russian exile, it was learned, had been hiding at Chamonix, under government supervision, since he was found recently at Barbizon, near Paris, planning "A Fourth International."

U. S. War Chest Is Advocated To Curb Crime

$2,500,000 for Armored Cars, Guns Considered by Budget Director.

(Associated Press.)

A war chest of between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000 to equip the Government's crime fighters was disclosed last night as being under consideration by Justice Department officials and Lewis Douglas, director of the budget.

Establishment of 10 or 12 additional offices of the Division of Investigation, enrollment of 270 men and the purchase of 20 armored cars, 200 speedy squad cars and a quantity of submachine gunus, rifles, bulletproof vests and tear gas equipment are contemplated.

Surveys are under way to determine which types of equipment are the best.

The department now has 419 agents in 24 offices.

With the 12-point legislative program proposed by Attorney General Cummings being gradually accepted by Congress, the Justice Department has been represented as in need of additional administrative facilities. In addition to wanting equipment for the men who chase the Dillingers, the "Pretty Boy" Floyds and other bandits, officials pointed out that facilities for prosecution would also need extension. They observed that the burdens of United States attorneys, marshals and their aids would increase.

Boy, 15, Father of 3, Divorces Wife, 17

Oshkosh, Wis., May 12 (AP).—Fifteen-year-old Lawrence Runke, father of three children, was granted a divorce yesterday from his 17-year-old wife, who is about to become a mother again.

County Judge D. E. McDonald ordered the decree on the boy's testimony that the children have been removed to an institution because of their mother's neglect.

Plasterers Due to Quit Work Friday

Walkout Is Expected to Bring Shutdown on U. S. Buildings.

A strike of all union plasterers in Washington, to take effect at the close of work next Friday, appears certain today following the disclosure that demands for $1.75 an hour and a six-hour day have been presented to their employers and will be rejected.

If plasterers join the carpenters, who have been on strike since May 1 for $1.37½ an hour for a six-hour work day, an immediate shutdown on virtually all Federal building operations in the District will be imperative.

Not until yesterday could it be confirmed that the plasterers' union met last Thursday night and voted for a 25-cent-per-hour increase and reduction of the eight-hour day to six, putting them on a 30-hour-week basis instead of the present 40.

Now receiving $12 a day, the plasterers would be paid $10.50 if their demands are met. Their objective is to spread work among unemployed members of their craft by adoption of the shorter working day, they said.

Rejection Is Predicted.

But the terms will not be met, one plastering contractor, who has thousands of dollars' worth of work tied up in two of the largest Federal construction projects in the Capital, told The Post last night. He said the Plasters Employers Association, of which he is a member, will consider the proposal Tuesday night and is certain to turn it down as it stands.

The strike or lockout, whichever develops, will commence a week from today, unless a settlement is effected meantime.

Plasterers were receiving $1.75 an hour, $14 a day until last September, when a six months' agreement reducing the hourly scale to $1.50 was signed. It expired April 1 and since that time they have been working at the same rate by "gentlemen's agreement" until the NRA prescribes a scale, the contractor, who asked that his name not be disclosed, said.

New Wage Issue.

Another threatening labor issue, involving the employment of women cleaners at "shocking" wages, was described yesterday by Larry Kelly, business agent of the building laborers' union. He said about five colored women have been hired to clean newly installed metal doors and fixtures in the Labor-I. C. C. building at $1 for an eight-hour day, or 12½ cents an hour.

Although they are not members of a union, their case was taken up by Kelly because continuation of the practice is a peril to the wage scales of all workers, he asserted. If the condition is not corrected by the contractor, to whom he protested, Kelly said he will lay the matter before the Labor and Treasury Departments.

He did not blame James Stewart & Co., general contractor, but two subcontractors. Stewart was contracted first, he explained, because the general contractor is responsible for the rates paid employes by subcontractors.

No move was made over the week-end to effect some sort of agreement, which will return to work approximately 400 carpenters, who struck May 1. Negotiations are expected to be resumed today, however, with the Labor Department acting as conciliator.

Mother to Ask Parole For Young Lea Soon

Raleigh, N. C., May 13 (AP).—Mrs. Luke Lea today said a formal petition for executive clemency for Luke Lea, jr., her stepson, who has just started serving a two-year term in State's Prison here, would be filed some time after Tuesday.

Acting without the aid of an attorney, Mrs. Lea said she expected to file with her letter to Commissioner of Paroles Edwin M. Gill statements from physicians in Nashville, Tenn., who have treated young Lea for a malignant disease.

Coast-to-Coast Air Mail Dash Of 11½ Hours Sets New Mark

Newark, N. J., May 13 (U.P.).—Jack Frye, flying mail from Los Angeles to New York, today broke the transcontinental speed record for transport planes by covering the distance in 11 hours and 31 minutes.

The flight precourses regular overnight delivery of mail in New York, from the Pacific Coast. The plane, a weirdly-streamlined Northrup Gamma, was designed in response to the Postoffice Department's request two years ago for equipment to perform such service.

Frye, alone in the ship, carried 355 pounds of mail and 85 pounds of air express.

The pilot achieved terrific speed by ascending to 14,000 feet. Meeting bad weather over the Midwest, he rose to 17,000 feet but found his motor lost some of its efficiency in the stratosphere.

The record compares with Eddie Rickenbacker's 13 hours and 2 minutes, established earlier this year in a Douglas transport carrying mail and passengers. Jimmy Hazlip's transcontinental mark of 10 hours, 19 minutes, made in a racing plane, still stands.

"I had to fight my way over and through snowstorms, rain and ice, but the ice was not serious," Frye said. "However, it was enough to coat the windshield.

"The plane performed beautifully. I didn't have it wide open, but used about 60 per cent power in the West and 75 per cent in the East."

Frye, veteran Transcontinental and Western Airways pilot, averaged 227 miles an hour. The test was authorized by the Postoffice Department and marked restoration of TWA's temporary air-mail contract.

Moscow Waits for U. S. to Open Kerensky Debt Parley.

Stalin Hints Deal To Help in Trade

Suggests Loan With High Interest to Apply on Obligations.

Moscow, May 13 (U.P.).—The Soviet government is prepared to discuss funding of the controversial Kerensky debt, in connection with the larger question of credits and trade, whenever the United States opens the issue formally, it was stated today.

The United Press learned, however, that whatever means the Soviet government may be considering for funding this obligation, they do not include payment in silver.

Bank Exempted.

The question of the $187,000,000 obligation of the brief Kerensky government to the United States Treasury has been brought into the foreground of Soviet-American relations by the Johnson bill. It was interpreted to mean no private agency in the United States can grant loans to Russia until the debt was funded. The new Soviet Export-Import Bank, set up by the United States Government, was exempted from the Johnson act ban, but its directors have announced it, too, will withhold loans until the Soviets present a satisfactory debt settlement.

Although there has been no official statement from the Soviet government regarding the debt, its viewpoint may be summarized reliably as follows:

In the first place, the present regime does not admit any responsibility for obligations of previous regimes. However, in order to facilitate trade and remove this sore spot from Soviet-American relations, Moscow is willing to negotiate with Washington, but only if President Roosevelt takes the initiative.

High Interest Rate.

Josef Stalin, Soviet dictator, and other leaders have intimated that if the United States advanced an ample loan to finance purchase of machinery and other products in America, the Soviet government might pay an unusually high rate of interest, part of which could be considered as payment on the Kerensky debt.

Soviet officials were surprised today by reports from abroad that Moscow planned to fund the Kerensky debt in silver.

Soviet currency is backed by gold and platinum. No silver is used.

Exports of silver are considered necessary from Siberian mines to help maintain the Soviet Union's balance of trade with other nations. There can not, therefore, be any intention of employing it for funding debts of past regimes.

Moscow reports that the Soviet government is willing to begin discussing the question of the Kerensky debt if the discussion could be made a part of the whole issue of old debts and new credits caused mild surprise among well-informed observers here.

It has been understood negotiations over the outstanding questions not cleared up at the time of recognition last November had been going on intermittently ever since. Throughout most of the time, observers believe, the talks have taken place in Moscow between Ambassador Bullitt and Soviet officials. Certain supplementary conversations have occurred here, notably when Ambassador Troyanovsky called upon President Roosevelt a fortnight ago.

Roosevelt Knows Cracker Box Lore, Politics, Says Jim

New York, May 13 (AP).—President Roosevelt, said Postmaster General James A. Farley today, has had a thorough grounding in "cracker-box philosophy," and in that respect, he believes, the Nation is fortunate.

"The President knows small town politics from the ground up," he said. "He is in sympathy with the opinions of the small town storekeeper as well as with those of the most advanced political theorists."

Radio Spans Ocean, Unites Lang Family

Son Here Talks With Father, Fiancee, in Oberammergau.

Radio, yesterday, reached across the Atlantic on Mother's Day to unite a Washington resident with his famous family and sweetheart living in the Passion village of Oberammergau, Germany.

Dr. Anton Lang, jr., Georgetown University professor, was the son.

The family was that of the senior Anton, famed for generations as Passion Play actors. Anton Lang, sr., who for several years has taken the role of Christus, will read the prologue in this year's 300th anniversary production of the play.

The sweetheart was Klara Mayr, daughter of Guido Mayr, the Judas of the last production, who will take the part of one of the three women at the crucifixion during the anniversary presentation.

Hot Campaign Is Closed in Pennsylvania

Pinchot Group Promises Rigid Probe of All Contributions.

By Raymond Clapper.

Philadelphia, May 13.—Widespread but unverified charges that important money is to be thrown into the fight to keep Gov. Gifford Pinchot out of the United States Senate dominated the closing days of Pennsylvania's most bitter primary fight which will be decided Tuesday.

Pinchot forces gave notice that they would go behind official reports in search of hidden contributions. All voters were called upon to volunteer confidentially any information they might have regarding allegedly improper use of money. From the Democratic side it was stated that Federal agents also were watching the situation.

From Pinchot's side the charges has been that the forces seeking to renominate Senator David A. Reed on the Republican ticket had made excessive use of money. It is generally felt by politicians that the Senator must pile up a heavy vote in Philadelphia to defeat the galloping Governor whose popularity in rural and coal mining sections of the State has survived many years as an office holder and candidate. Where politicians gathered over the week-end, the opinion was advanced that Senator Reed's fate depended upon whether enough money was poured into Philadelphia for "election day expenses" to produce the needed majorities.

Reed Has Fought Hard.

Senator Reed, conservative, dignified, has gone into the State and in face of some odds, conducted an aggressive barnstorming campaign, shaking hands with farmers and miners, and swinging at Gov. Pinchot with such hard knuckles that the veteran Rough Rider, who is no mollycoddle as a campaigner himself, has cried out that the Senator was "fouling" him. This fight, the most energetic Senator Reed was ever compelled to make, has

Sleeper, Michigan War Governor, Dies

Bad Axe, Mich., May 13 (AP).—Albert E. Sleeper, Michigan's wartime Governor and long a prominent figure in Republican politics of the State, died at his home here Sunday afternoon. He was 71 years old.

The former Governor had been in poor health for the past year. The funeral will be held Wednesday at Lexington, Mich.

He became State treasurer in 1903 and served until 1912. He was elected Governor in 1915, for the first of two terms and the election gave him the greatest plurality ever given a Governor up to that time. His last term ended in 1919.

"Brass Rail" Drinking Returns to New York

Albany, N. Y., May 13 (AP).—Gov. Lehman signed the permanent liquor control bill tonight, opening the way for New Yorkers to drink legally at bars on and after July 1.

The legalization of bars ends a controversy which began when the temporary liquor control board first issued its rules for drinking last year. Beer bars were permitted, but liquor drinking at bars was banned.

Thomas Plans to Insert Clause in Metal Bill Under Study.

Complete Default Seen Otherwise

Morgenthau Hints Favor of Plan; Senate Bloc Behind Idea.

Great Britain may be permitted to pay silver into the Treasury to meet her June 15 war debt installment of $83,670,000.

Senator Elmer Thomas, inflationist leader, will add to the bill on which the silverites expect to agree today or tomorrow a clause renewing authority to receive silver on the war debts.

The subject was mentioned during the recent conference which President Roosevelt had with the silver bloc. Senator Borah objected that he did not want to see the silver issue sidetracked in half-measures. However, he said last night he would not necessarily oppose the Thomas idea.

Other silverites favor it. Senator Adams, of Colorado, declared yesterday that if taking silver would contribute to solution of the debt impasse and at the same time add to silver reserves he would approve.

Morgenthau Favor Hinted.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau indicated to the silverites during the White House conference that he favored accepting silver on the war debts. The first British token was paid in silver under authority, since expired, in the Thomas inflation amendment to the farm bill.

State Department officials have shown interest in the possibility, even though remote, of affording the British a chance to send us silver on June 15. The presumption is that the British treasury could obtain the silver from the Indian treasury at a discount. The Pittman silver agreement, reached at the London economic conference, but not technically binding, presents no obstacle, according to officials.

That is, they take the view that it would conform to the purpose of the agreement for Indian to release more than her quota of silver, provided the metal is for absorption into a monetary base.

Full Default an Alternative.

Officials have explored renewal of the authority to accept silver as a possible alternative to complete British default. The British cabinet's decision might be considerably affected by a chance to pay

Racer Saves Dog, Kills 7

French Driver, Car Out of Control, Brings Death to Crowd.

Fontainebleau, France, May 13 (AP). Five men and two women were killed and six persons injured today as the driver of an automobile in a hill race tried to avoid hitting a stray dog and plunged into a group of spectators.

The dog had wandered across the road where the race was being held in Fontainebleau Forest. Spectators waved to the driver, Eric Cochin, a military aviator, calling his attention to the animal.

Cochin pulled quickly on his steering wheel to miss the animal, and the speeding car went out of control. A few seconds later it had killed six persons whose thoughts had been centered on saving the life of the mongrel. Cochin died a short time later in a hospital. The dog apparently escaped with his life.

One of the women was decapitated as the car struck her. Two of those killed were soldiers from the artillery school here.

The race, arranged by a Fontainebleau automobibel club, attracted a huge throng of spectators, who were scattered along the course.

Thomas Plans to Insert Clause in Measure Under Study.

in silver and so avoid the stigma of being branded a "defaulter" under the Johnson act.

Officials frankly recognize that the idea is largely a desperate effort to find some way out of the debt impasse. It is taken for granted that the British government will not in any case undertake to meet the $85,000,000 installment in full if payment is required, as now, in dollars—or gold. That is regarded as politically, if not economically, out of the question.

Under the interpretation of the Johnson act communicated to the British government by Secretary of State Hull, payment of anything less than the full installment will make the British government subject to the Johnson act's ban. The one exception would be that the British were able to demonstrate inability to pay the full installment.

Would Halt Bond Sale.

There is little probability that Mr. Roosevelt himself would pronounce the British in default if only part payment, or another token payment, is received. The stigma would only arise when and if the British sought to float bonds in this country. Then, under Senator Johnson's construction of his law, the Government would be bound to prevent such a sale of bonds.

The problem before the British government is to avoid, if possible, being put in the position of being denied access to American capital markets. Silver might, perchance, afford a medium for meeting the June 15 payment in full. The silverites would be interested in it chiefly because it would add toward the 25 per cent silver reserve which is their goal.

The British might then look for readjustment of the debts after the fall elections. The price may be high in view of the slim hope of mutually acceptable debt adjustment by next December. London appears to feel, however, that Mr. Roosevelt would tackle the question more directly when the elections falling in his midterm are over.

Credit Worries Britain.

Beyond that, the British government is anxious to maintain its credit. That is why the token payments have been made all along. They have been, in effect, payments against the day when it would be politically possible to readjust the debts.

Senator Borah, who has shown a more sympathetic attitude than most members of Congress, remarked last night that he felt the British and French had been "misled" into thinking that the write-down of German reparations at Lausanne would be followed by a compensatory write-down of the debts to the United States.

However, he holds, with most of his colleagues, if not all of them, that the British can pay. The difficulties, not merely political, but economic, in obtaining dollars so far have had scant attention in Congress.

Unless further unforeseen deadlock develops, the silver bill should be agreed upon and rushed through Congress in quick order. Thus, the Treasury's authority to accept silver probably will be established well in advance of the June 15 due date on the debts.

Special Day Lauded By Mrs. Roosevelt

Fathers Needed Too.

"But I think that the influence of the fathers is just as essential.

"It is true that the fathers are often too much absorbed by business to pay as much attention as they like to their children. And, I do add, as much as they should."

The widows of former Presidents who sent messages were Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, sr., Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Benjamin Harrison and Mrs. Thomas J. Preston, jr., the former Mrs. Grover Cleveland.

Bainbridge Colby, former Secretary of State, introduced Mrs. Roosevelt as "the lovable, living, genuine mother of the President of the United States."

Schumann-Heink Sings.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who wore a black velvet evening gown until the banquet, had passed the day quietly. Before her brief address, Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink sang a song in her honor.

Another mother of a famous son who send Mrs. Roosevelt congratulations was Mrs. Evangeline Lodge Lindbergh, mother of the flying colonel.

Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, sent a telegram, as did former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, and Cardinal Hayes.

Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia officially welcomed Mrs. Roosevelt at the dinner.

Gathered about the President's mother at the head table besides Colby were Postmaster General James A. Farley; the father and mother of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr.; James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, and Mrs. Eleanor Boiling Byrd, Rear Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd's mother.

American Missionaries Flee Chinese Bandits

Hankow, China, May 14 (Monday) (AP).—American missionaries at Kishui, in West Hupeh Province, today evacuated the city, fearing incursions of renegades and bandit troops.

Kidnapers of the Rev. Howard Smith, of Washington, Pa., a missionary at P'eng Shui, are demanding a ransom of $35,000, it was learned today. Mr. Smith was taken captive recently by "rouges," Chinese irregulars.

Politics and People

By Elliott Thurston

If Gov. Pinchot takes the Republican Senatorial nomination away from Senator Reed in Pennsylvania's primaries tomorrow, the politicians will deduce that it is unhealthy to attack the New Deal. Fresh gloom will descend upon the Republican camp. The meeting of the Republican National Committee in Chicago on June 5, will lose much of its zest. Senator Reed's vagrant Presidential hopes will vanish. This year's campaign for Senate and House seats will take on a pronounced pro-New Deal tinge all through the country. Angels or fat cats, who might be ready to contribute to empty Republican coffers will think again. Either they will knot their purse-strings or give something to the Democrats.

Hands-offish though the White House professes to be, Mr. Roosevelt will find it hard to conceal his satisfaction. Jim Farley will publicly pronounce the result a vindication of the New Deal. The New Dealers, in general, will rejoice. They will be heartened to more and more operations upon the body politic. Republicans in Congress who have shown symptoms of regaining use of their vocal cords will have another attack of laryngitis. There will be far less viewing with alarm and far more pointing with pride.

The only thing that will temper Democratic jubilation will be the resultant political predicament. That is, too much Administration cheering for Gifford Pinchot will sound very sour to Mr. Joe Guffey and the organization of Democrats who aspire to beat Mr. Pinchot in the fall election.

* * * *

Conversely, if Mr. Reed should scalp Mr. Pinchot, the politicians will conclude that it is safe and sound to jump on the New Deal. The Democrats will be saddened. The Chicago scrap over which element of the G. O. P. is to get command of the Republican National committee will be far more feverish and more important. Senator Reed will hear the buzzing of the Presidential bee. This year's campaign will be a real battle, instead of a competition between candidates to see which can appear closer to the White House. The Republicans will rush to the brickbat pile.

Well-to-do laymen, who used to contribute to the Republicans and those who made a point of giving to the party in the ascendency, will come across with cash instead of alibis when the Republican hat passers appear. The White House will make plain that it took no part in the Republican primary in Pennsylvania. If anybody asks, it will be explained that Mr. Pinchot's visits to the White House have always been mere routine—no political significance whatever. Postmaster General Democratic National Committee Chairman Farley will respond to questioning on the outcome by discussing the sale of Mother's Day stamps.

The New Dealers will emphasize that Mr. Pinchot found fault with some of the New Deal program, and that Mrs. Pinchot flounced all over the Keystone State railing against the NRA. The Democratic politicians will spank any Young Liberal who essays more new experiments. Republicans in Congress who have been tongue-tied for well over a year will begin actively viewing with alarm.

* * * *

These are but the more obvious political reflexes to be expected. They suffice to explain why the eyes of the political world are focused so intently upon Pennsylvania's Republican primary. It will furnish the first definite clue to the way the tide is running. The test must be in the Republican primary, because the Democrats are all running as New Dealers. Pinchot is the first to try out pro-Rooseveltism on the Republican electorate. And the battle is staged in the Nation's most populous State, next to New York. Pennsylvania, moreover, was one of the scanty few Republican strongholds that held in 1932. A triumph for a pro-Roosevelt candidate in the Republican primary in Pennsylvania would mark a political transformation of major importance.

Doubtless, the issue is not clear cut, but no amount of alibi-ingenuity will be able to change the psychological sequences. The politicians generally, and the press and public at large, will construe a Pinchot victory as an indorsement of the Administration, a Reed victory as a repudiation of the Administration. Thus, the unprecedent National interest in a Pennsylvania primary is easy to understand. Here is a first, reasonably dependable barometer to show which way the wind blows. The readings will chart thousands of political courses.

PWA Grants to Railroads Add Millions to Prosperity

Ickes Explains How Cash Will Seep Into Many Lines of Trade.

Public Works Administration loans to railroad companies for repairing cars and engines in their own shops will result in the payment of $11,525,000 in wages to railroad shopmen and the purchase of $15,790,000 worth of materials for them to use, Administrator Harold L. Ickes announced yesterday.

"Most of the $15,970,000 will find its way into the pockets of men employed in iron and coal mines, forests, factories and mills where the raw materials are produced, processed and fabricated," Ickes said. "A sizable share of it will find its way into the pockets of men employed on the railroads, that will transport both the raw and finished materials, and also into the pockets of the men and women who work in offices at keeping books, writing letters and other forms of white collar work.

"During the depression, the railroad shop towns were bad spots on the employment map. With declining revenues and stationary or rising fixed charges on their bonded indebtedness, the railroads were forced to retrench in every direction on their operating expenses. Cars and locomotives were shoved onto sidings, to wait for the turn of the tide, instead of being repaired as soon as they got out of order."

As a result of PWA loans, 1,552 locomotives, 1,956 passenger cars and 33,323 freight cars will be repaired and put in shape to handle traffic which, Ickes stated, is increasing.

The total of PWA railroad loan allotments for all purposes is $199,607,800, and Ickes has signed contracts covering $182,074,000 of this sum.

Green Warns Of Auto Strike

Declares Workers Must Be Given Right to Organize.

A prediction of strikes throughout the automobile industry "unless workers secure redress for grievances about which they have complained over a long period of time" was made yesterday by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

"The strike of workers at the Fisher Body plant at Flint, Mich., reflects the spirit of unrest and discontent among the automobile workers at present," Green said. "It is of a serious nature and, unless the worngs are righted, strikes will occur in other manufacturing plants of the industry."

Owners and manufacturers of the automobile industry interpose the strongest opposition possible to the exercise of the right of their workers to organize, the A. F. of L. president asserted.

"They have set up company unions which are financed, fostered, administered and maintained by the company, in opposition to the attempts of workers to organize independent unions," Green charged. "Through printed statements, circular letters and management activity, workers have been intimidated and coerced into joining company unions.

"There is no doubt but that the automobile workers will continue to protest, even to the extent of striking, so long as the manufacturers continue to force them to accept the company union and deny them the right of free organization, equality in bargaining power and the right to be represented by men of their own choosing in collective bargaining.

"There will be no peace in the automobile industry until company union domination and intimidation is stopped."

Joseph W. Harriman Goes on Trial Today

New York, May 13 (AP).—Trial of Joseph W. Harriman, former president of the defunct Harriman National Bank, on charges of wilful misapplication of bank funds and misappropriations of stock, is scheduled to begin in Federal District Court tomorrow, after nearly a year of delay.

Harriman is accused of misapplication of $300,000 in bank funds, and misappropriation of stock of equal value.

League Faced By 3 Disputes For Solution

Council Meeting Will Study Chaco, Hungary War Threat.

Geneva, May 13 (AP).—Three delicate problems involving peaceful relations between nations were uppermost today in the minds of the members of the council of the League of Nations, here for the seventy-ninth session of the council which opens tomorrow.

The report of the league's commission recommending that the implements of war be withheld from Paraguay and Bolivia if they do not consent to arbitration of their jungle conflict shared interest with Hungary's complaint against Yugoslavia and with the Saar plebiscite.

The Chaco report was studied carefully, especially by those who still have hopes for a disarmament agreement which will place embargoes upon war materials for nations involved in armed conflicts.

No effort to fix the responsibility for the Chaco war is expected, inasmuch as the commission indicated that determination of the aggressor would be an extremely difficult problem. The council may call upon the combatants to submit their quarrel to the Permanent Court of International Justice, as recommended by the commission.

From a European standpoint the lieving the situation on the Yugo- appeal of Hungary for help in reslavian-Hungarian border was regarded as even more delicate than the Chaco situation.

Yugoslavian representatives studied the Hungarian protest but did not indicate what reply would be made. One spokesman said that it was regarded by Yugoslavian circles as an unfriendly gesture.

The league council has before it reports from its commission governing the Saar Basin that strong rumors of a coup d'etat by elements not identified can not be ignored.

Some complaints against campaigning methods of the Germans in their effort to regain the Saar in the plebiscite also have been heard in French and British circles.

Woman's Career Begins at Forty, Research Shows

New York, May 13 (AP).—Even for women in business life begins at 40, the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs said today in a study submitted to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

Age no longer retards a woman's advance in business, the federation concluded after charting questionnaires of 21,168 women throughout the country.

The median for highest earnings was found among women over 50 but under 60 years of age. Two women reported salaries of $25,000 a year.

Earnings were found to increase with experience and age up to 60 years. For single women they were higher than for married women.

One-fourth of the group received salaries less than $1,210, only one-fourth received more than $2,075, and less than 3 per cent earned as much as $4.000 a year.

The general conclusion reached was that in the last few decades women have gone forward but only very slowly, and that only a "strikingly small proportion" of women have reached top positions.

Grau Leaves Mexico, Taking 'Ideas' for Cuba

Mexico, D. F., May 13 (AP).—Dr. Ramon Grau San Martin, former President of Cuba, will leave for Havana tomorrow with a number of new ideas of government gained during his three-month stay in Mexico, but he was noncommittal when asked if he would be a candidate for president late this year.

Grau said he has "a large number of followers and sympathizers" and that he would work with them to put his measures into effect.

Turkey Ratifies Trade Agreement With Soviet

Ankara, Turkey, May 13 (AP).—The Turkish Parliament today ratified a treaty with Russia under which the Soviet Union will give Turkey $8,000,000 in credit for machinery and merchandise, to be repaid in 25 years with Turkish products.

Construction of a large textile factory at Cesarea, in Middle Anatolia, under the direction of Soviet technicians, will begin this week as the first big project under the Turkish five-year industrial program.

Army Plane Crashes In Florida; Pilots Safe

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., May 13 (AP). Forced down by heavy rain, a twin-motored Army bombing plane nosed over in landing at an airport here today, damaging the propellors and the gunner's seat.

Lieut. Todd and Corpl. Housely, who were flying the plane from Bolling Field, Washington, to Miami, escaped injuries.

Lieut. E. R. Todd and Corpl. W. H. Housely were on a training flight, according to authorities at Bolling Field, where the two were stationed. They lived at the field.

Former Air Record Holder Shot in Quarrel

Sparta, Ill., May 13 (AP).—Kenneth Hunter, one of four brothers who established a flight endurance record of 553 hours at Chicago in 1930, was shot and critically wounded as the climax to a quarrel with a St. Louis physician at a country club here today.

Dr. Richard Bullard, St. Louis, was questioned. The shooting, officers said, followed an argument between Hunter and Dr. Bullard over attentions Hunter had been paying a young woman.

River Gives Up Body of Youth

Harold M. Purner, 23, Is Believed Victim of Fall While Fishing.

A body identified as that of Harold M. Purner, 23, of Park Lane, Va., was recovered from the Potomac, near Chain Bridge, yesterday.

It is believed Purner was the man who plunged from rocks on the Virginia shore last Wednesday. Physicians said he had been dead for several days. The body was found floating in the river about 300 yards below the bridge by Vance Griffs, of 921 Kennedy street northwest.

Griffs summoned aid and harbor police took the body to the District Morgue. Identification was made by relatives.

Police recalled that last Wednesday J. Parker Luckett, of Falls Church, Va., reported he saw a man fall into the water from a high rock on the Virginia shore above Chain Bridge. The man, Luckett said, apparently was fishing when he lost his balance.

'Important Money' Charged In Pennsylvania Primary

made headway. But as election day approaches, the result was generally felt to be in great doubt with Pinchot apparently having an edge, and the outcome depending upon the Philadelphia turnout for Reed.

Though it is nothing new in Pennsylvania politics to hear the frank talk about money, this Reed-Pinchot campaign has, until toward the closing days, been lifted considerably above the usual level prevailing in this vast Commonwealth and has been pretty much of a fight over the New Deal of President Roosevelt. From this point of view the Pennsylvania Republican Senatorial fight is of considerable National significance.

Senator Reed, so closely in sympathy with the Mellon interests and the other great property influences in the State that he has been called by Pinchot the errand boy of Mellon, has lashed out aggressively at the Roosevelt New Deal. He has spared the President personally, because of Mr. Roosevelt's great popularity even among Pennsylvania Republicans to whom the best Democrat has usually been deemed far below the worst Republican.

NRA Called Oppressive.

But he has not spared the Roosevelt program. He has painted NRA as an instrument of big business, an oppressor of the little man. AAA he has held up as a device for collecting processing taxes from this rich State and handing them over to what Joe Grundy called the "backward States" of the South ruled by Democratic party leaders.

He has assailed the cost of the recovery program and what he terms the robbery of the gold devaluation policy. He is a frank, unashamed, sharp-tongued Old Dealer who has refused to pull his punches in face of considerable evidence that the Roosevelt program is more popular in Pennsylvania than he wishes it were.

Against this clear-cut conservative is the Republican New Dealer, the rangy, light-footed Pinchot, who has a good deal of Franklin Roosevelt's skill as a political salesman. A Rough Rider under the redoubtable Teddy, a foe of the old order even in the ancient Bull Moose days, a man whose campaign stock in trade has been the Mellons, the Grundys, the utilities and the other sacred idols of the sedate old Union League, Gov. Pinchot has pledged his allegiance to President Roosevelt in alternate sentences. If anything, he is ready to go to Washington and add a few more cards to the New Deal.

Norris Supports Pinchot.

He brought Senator Norris into the State to campaign for him on behalf of the pro-Roosevelt Republican insurgents. He induced Mayor LaGuardia of New York to speak for him on the air. His energetic, red-haired wife, who is a kind of Mrs. Roosevelt in Pennsylvania, has been out barnstorming for her husband whose health has compelled him to curtail his speaking schedule somewhat.

Mrs. Pinchot, too, has championed the New Deal except that she—just like a woman—has sailed into Gen. Johnson and tweaked the Blue Eagle's tail feathers in behalf of the workers who, she says, have not been protected by the doughty general from chiseling employers.

Of course, the campaign, as always in Pennsylvania, is cluttered up with a good deal of side play and local rabbit punching and gouging in the clinches. But in the main, this Democratic President in the White House is the overshadowing issue in the senatorial fight, and one which elevates the contest above the usual paper money standard which obtains in Pennsylvania politics.

Guffey Leads Democrats.

Next in importance is the Democratic senatorial contest. Joseph E. Guffey, former Democratic National committeeman, a sort of political accident who was the original Roosevelt man in a pro-Smith Democratic setting, is running for the Democratic senatorial nomination from the great vantage point of the Roosevelt coattails. He is regarded as almost a sure winner.

His opponent, Roland S. Morris, former Ambassador to Japan, is a little nearer kinship with David A. Reed than with the New Deal Democrats, though he protests that he supported Roosevelt after the nomination. He was for Smith before, which has excluded him from Administration favor.

While the National Administration insists it is not interfering in primary campaigns, Postmaster General James A. Farley is favorable to Guffey, has given him control of Federal appointments in the State and done everything but indorse him publicly. In fact, he has done more than indorse him publicly; he has given him the weapons which make it almost impossible for him to lose.

Guffey's New Deal instincts are not those of Pinchot. In fact they are about as far apart as Pinchot and Reed actually. Talk in Pennsylvania is that if Pinchot is nominated, big business money will get behind Guffey. He's in fairly solid around Pittsburgh, was a member of Senator Reed's wedding party, and doesn't get down to details in discussing New Deal principles as they might apply to affairs in Pennsylvania.

Party Growing Rapidly.

It makes the Pinchot crowd snort to even think of Guffey as a disciple of Roosevelt. His nomination will be construed in Pennsylvania as solely a demonstration of the power of the Roosevelt name. The Democratic party is growing rapidly in Pennsylvania and it is no empty honor that Joe Guffey is gunning for.

For Governor, William A. Schnader, Philadelphia lawyer and present attorney general, is the Republican favorite. Lieut. Gov. Edward C. Shannon is rated as next best. Fourteen others are on the Republican ballot, six of whom withdrew after the ballots were printed. On the Democratic side, George H. Earle, former minister to Austria, running on the New Deal ticket with Guffey, is regarded as the likely candidate for Governor. Four others are on the ticket with him.

These gubernatorial candidates are an oddly assorted lot for the top job on the Nation's second State. The first position on the Republican ballot is considered worth 25,000 to 50,000 votes just because the less intelligent Pennsylvania voters are apt to mark the first name on the list.

This pole position is held by a one-legged veteran, Louis G. Karzis, of Pittsburgh, who has made no campaign. The second position is held by Jay W. Sechler, a Philadelphia lawyer, not very well known. But, such are the processes of Democracy in Pennsylvania politics that his friends predict he will get a sizable vote because his name begins with an "S," the same as the two leading candidates, the idea being that many voters will see the first letter and think they are voting for either Schnader of Shannon.

Hopes for "Nordic" Vote.

Furthermore his name is sandwiched between two foreign sounding names, those of Karzis and Margiotti, and his friends expect he will benefit by the rebound of the Nordics as they shy back from the names of his bedfellows on either side.

Charles J. Margiotti is prominent in the Moose lodge, an attorney in the lottery trial of Senator James J. Davis. His vote will show what the membership of the Moose lodge is.

Half a dozen judges are on the ticket sprinkled among college professors, former congressmen, perpetual drys, a Pottstown butcher, and an ousted State official, who entered as a spite candidate in one of Pinchot's strong coal counties.

In this line-up there has been a good deal of last minute trading, which is one of those complicated affairs that make Pennsylvania politics such a fascinating game to participants and add gray hairs on the heads of out-of-town reporters who take them seriously.

The Pennsylvania city ballot carries 135 names of candidates, indicating that there are still a good many people here looking for employment.

Warning against the use of money in the primary election and notice that expenses and contributions would be investigated came today from the secretary of the Commonwealth, Richard J. Beamish, a Pinchot man.

"Officially, as the secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, I am today warning every candidate for a State-wide office that it is my intention to enforce strictly and to the full letter of the law the statutes relating to the receipts and expenditures of candidates in this primary," Beamish said in a speech at Easton."

"I hereby serve notice that I am going to examine rigorously every item in every expense account. More than that, I am going behind the official reports and if I find that money has been contributed for which no account has been made, or that money has been spent for which no entry appears upon the report, I will enforce with the full power of my office the penalties for failure to make such reports. These penalties carry both fines and imprisonment and will be enforced if the great power with which I am clothed can enforce them.

Refers to Vare's Election.

"It is well at this time to recall the fact that illegal and excessive contributions and expenditures have in the past been sufficient for disqualification to hold high office. I refer to the disqualification of William S. Vare for a seat in the United States Senate.

"I hereby invite any person in Pennsylvania who shall have knowledge of any contribution or expenditure in the interest of any candidate that is believed to be improper to communicate with me immediately."

Yesterday Pinchot's campaign manager said that Reed forces were spending so much money that the Senator would never be seated if nominated and elected. Guffey said that Federal Department of Justice agents "have hit the slush fund trail and will be on guard at the primary against election frauds and exhorbitant expenditures by all the senatorial candidates.

Britain Facing Final Decision On War Debts

Simon Cancels Geneva Trip Because of Emergency Before Commons.

London, May 13 (AP).—The British government today faced a showdown on the war debt issue and other foreign policies, including the trade war with Japan and its plans for the 1935 disarmament conference.

The seriousness of the situation was emphasized when Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, tentatively canceled plans to go to Geneva for the opening of the League of Nations Council Tuesday, apparently believing he would be needed here to defend the government on the House of Commons floor.

Washington's warning that a token payment on the debt installment due June 15 will be regarded as a default under the Johnson act aroused the opposition to a determination to force the government to reveal its policies during the week.

The conservatives have demanded that Sir John explain the cabinet's policy Monday, and a full reply is expected by midweek. They also are asking what policy is to be followed with regard to armament, in view of the apparent collapse of the disarmament conference and strengthening of war forces by other nations.

The barrage of questions on these and other problems threatened to bring about the most extensive debate in the house in years.

While a statement on the debts is fully expected, the cabinet is hopeful it can shunt aside armament discussion until after the League Council meets.

Anglo-Japanese relations and the German debt negotiations are other matters which the opposition wants the government to discuss fully and frankly.

Herriot Backs Paris Cabinet

Veteran Leader Removes Peril to Session of Parliament.

Clermont-Ferrand, France, May 13 (AP).—Sweeping aside opposition all along the line, supporters of the veteran Edouard Herriot today lined up the power Radical Socialist party behind the government of Premier Gaston Doumergue and removed the major political peril from the session of Parliament which opens Tuesday.

Herriot not only obtained support for the Doumergue cabinet, in which he is a minister of state, but also brought about the expulsion from the party of seven members of the Chamber of Deputies whose names have been connected with the Stavisky pawnshop scandal.

Recovering from the illness which interrupated his speech yesterday, Herriot, who has been premier three times and is president of the Radical Socialists, returned to the closing session of the party's congress today to receive a wild ovation.

His triumph over the "Young Turk" element of the party, which had sought to force his resignation from the Doumergue cabinet and oppose the government, was complete.

FRC Approves Forest Work Expansion Plan

Virginia Land Is Included in Program to Boost Rehabilitation.

President Roosevelt's emergency conservation program made new progress yesterday with the announcement by Secretary of War Dern that his Forest Reservation Commission has approved expansion of existing National forest units by more than 3,000,000 acres and immediate purchase of 762,188 acres of timber lands.

Included in the expansion program are 658,800 acres in southwest Virginia, a new forest purchase area to be known as the Clinch unit. Funds for the purchases are to be paid from the $20,000,000 allocated the commission by the President from conservation appropriations.

Dern, who is president of the commission, said acquisition of the new units, nearly doubling the National forest area in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, will enable the United States Forest Service and cooperating agencies to consolidate fire protection, combat excessive erosion in many portions of the Tennessee drainage system and put thousands of acres of forests in better productive condition.

Rehabilitation of the new areas, Dern said, also is expected to aid flood control and hydro-electric developments by providing continuous and even stream flows. Among the industries to be aided by the project the War Secretary included pulp and paper mills, wood-using manufactures and rayon mills.

Ogpu Chief Buried Amid Roar of Guns

30,000 Jam Red Square at Police Funeral.

Moscow, May 13 (AP).—While a 21-gun salute echoed in Red Square and a military band blared the Internationale, the ashes of Vyacheslaff Rudolph Menzhinsky, chief of the Ogpu, powerful Soviet police organization, were buried today in a niche in the Kremlin wall.

A crowd estimated at 30,000, consisting of picked delegations of workers and several battalions of Ogpu troops, jammed the Red Square as the funeral procession marched half a mile from the house of Soviets, where the remains had lain in state since Menzhinsky's death Thursday.

Insull Plays Film Role; Prosecutor Bans Kidnap Plea

Chicago, May 13 (AP).—"Kidnaped," extradited or deported, Samuel Insull is here to stay, Dwight H. Green, youthful Federal prosecutor, said today as he and assistants shaped the case against the fallen utilities magnate who contends the Government brought him here illegally.

Scarcely had Insull been returned than he made the charge that he was "kidnaped" by the American Government in Asia Minor and spirited across the seas to face Federal trial on charges of violation of bankruptcy and mail laws.

While clouds of the storm of expected legal controversy formed, the principal in the case spent a quiet Sunday—his rest at St. Luke's Hospital interrupted only by visits from his family and the sudden casting of himself in the role of a movie actor.

Colorado Prisoners Stoical in Tuberculosis Cure Battle.

Canon City, Colo., May 13 (AP).—Two convicts in the State prison who offered their bodies as testing grounds for science confronted today the most crucial part of the experiment.

Already two injections of a serum which scientists believe may supply a preventive for tuberculosis have been shot into the arms of Carl Erickson, 62, and Mike Schmidt, 53, life termers.

The next move in the tests will be to shoot millions of tuberculosis bacilli into the prisoners' veins. Although penitentiary officials and the scientists declined to say when this will be done, it is expected this step will be taken next week.

Both prisoners, as well as others who will take the tests later, have been promised executive clemency.

Whether they will leave the prison as healthy men or tuberculosis-ridden sufferers will depend on the efficacy of the serum devised by Dr. H. J. Corper and his associates in the laboratories of the National Jewish Hospital in Denver.

Dr. Corper said the serum, when tried on animals, was found effective as a protection against tuberculosis. Dr. Corper is supervising the experiments at the prison.

Prison officials said both Erickson and Schmidt are stoical about the operations.

"It isn't so bad so far and I haven't felt a bit different since the serum shots were given than I did before," Erickson said.

"I have worked every day in the blacksmith shop and some of that work is hard, but it hasn't affected my strength."

$90,000 Fire In Winchester Halts Worship

Churchgoers Aid Firemen; Home Dwellers Flee Blaze.

By C. B. Carr.

Winchester, Va., May 13.—Fire in the rear of a second-hand furniture store in the heart of Winchester's downtown business district this morning caused damage estimated at $90,000 to six business places and two apartment buildings.

The fire, discovered in the rear of a second-hand furniture store and adjacent to a waste-paper plant operated by Roy Larrick, quickly shot up several hundred feet in the air as churchgoers deserted nearby edifices, some filled with smoke, and clamored to the scene of the blaze.

A general fire alarm brought all available fire-fighting apparatus to the blaze. The fire spread rapidly through the Winchester Furniture Co., the Professional Building and the H. W. Barrett cabinet shop.

Apartment Dwellers Flee.

Before the blaze had reached the second and third floors of these buildings, where a score of apartments housed more than 100 persons, firemen rushed through the buildings and hurried residents to the street. The occupants found it impossible to remove their personal belongings and more than $5,000 of the total damage was owing to water and smoke filtering through the apartments.

Buildings in which the business and apartments were located were owned by the Funk estate, of Winchester, and Phillip O. Faulkner, of Martinsburg, W. Va.

Crisman's furniture store suffered upward of $10,000 loss as their stock was drenched with water. Crisman was said to carry no insurance.

R. E. Avey, manager of the Winchester Furniture Co., said a cursory examination of his loss placed the figure at $25,000, partially covered by insurance.

Both the Faulkner and Funk Buildings, landmarks in downtown Winchester, suffered damage which is believed will aggregate upward of $50,000.

Church Services Delayed.

Billows of smoke poured into Grace Lutheran Church, nearby where special Mother's Day services were about to start, driving the communicants from the place and delaying services for nearly two hours. In all Winchester churches services were delayed as Fire Chief C. Lee Barr ordered electric power cut off in the city. Fear that the fire would burn a high-powered transmission line caused the action, he said.

The fire broke out at a time when the streets of Winchester were thronged with churchgoers and hundreds of men dressed in their Sunday attire, grabbed hose lines, axes and ladders to battle the blaze. All Winchester fire-fighting units are volunteer.

At the time of the attack, Johnson was dozing in the sun on a small platform adjoining the Newbold garage. His assailant crept from a parked automobile to within a few feet of the victim, and opened fire without warning.

County officials said that a statement by Johnson, relating how Bart Davit, Angelo Rosegrant, Felix McDonald and another man held Dr. Kelley captive in Johnson's small farm house in St. Louis County, was submitted to the grand jury which indicted the six persons.

Davit, Rosegrant, McDonald and Tommy Wilders were indicted with Mrs. Muench and Johnson. McDonald is a convict in the Missouri Penitentiary at Jefferson City. Davit and Rosegrant are held in the St. Louis County Jail, and Wilders is a fugitive.

Kelley was released after being held for ten days, without the payment of ransom which had been demanded.

The prosecutor's office said the reputed confession of Johnson had been carefully guarded, with the intention of using his testimony against the other defendants at their trials.

Eight Bodies Sought Aboard Sunken Tug

Bremen, Germany, May 13 (AP). Salvage crews working from two lighters sought today to recover bodies of eight persons who went down in the steel tug Mercur yesterday, after she was rammed by the steamer Albert Ballin, which she was towing into port.

The victims—who included the wife of the tug's cook— were believed to have lived in a watertight compartment of the tug for three hours after it sank, rescuers during that period having heard knocking inside.

Trade Bureau Shake-up Near As Thorp Quits

Dickinson Takes Charge; McAdoo Man Stripped of His Duties.

(Associated Press.)

Major changes in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce neared yesterday following the resignation of Willard Thorp as bureau head.

The Assistant Secretary of Commerce, John Dickinson, friend of Thorp, who had charged that the latter was forced out through patronage "mongering," took over the bureau as acting head under Presidential order.

At the same time H. Russell Amory, assistant bureau chief and protege of Senator McAdoo (Democrat), California, who ordinarily would have become acting head, was stripped of most of his official duties, although still retaining title and office.

Amory, charged on one side with having led a faction to prevent the Senate confirmation of Thorp, and defended on the other side as "scapegoat" and "victim of circumstances," had nothing to say yesterday.

Amory worked for McAdoo in the latter's political campaign, and was appointed to the bureau by Secretary Roper, a friend of McAdoo. Roper declined to discuss the situation, but he indorsed the action of the President in turning over the bureau to Dickinson, who said he would see if it could be run without political manipulation, and that on that determination his future relationship to the department depended.

Dickinson apparently had been given carte blanche to make changes where needed. He selected H. R. Stutsman, chief of the District office section of the bureau, to investigate personnel, and otherwise to give aid. Dickinson intends henceforth to devote half his time to the bureau and half to his work as Assistant Secretary.

Police at Tucson Probe Kidnap Plot

Greenway - Douglas Angle Being Studied.

Tucson, Ariz., May 13 (AP).—Authorities studied today the ramifications of a reported kidnap plot declared to involve Mrs. Isabella Greenway, Arizona's Congresswoman, and Lewis Douglas, director of the budget, while Fernando Robles, father of the kidnaped June Robles, said he expected the abductors would get in touch with him in the next 24 hours.

Six-year-old June, police said, apparently became the victim of the kidnapers when their plans to abduct Mrs. Greenway or Douglas fell through. This supposition was based upon the statement of a New Mexico Penitentiary convict, forwarded to authorities here.

June Robles was seized April 25 as she was going home from school.

Utilities Resist Losses as Week Closes; Sales Up to 250,000 Shares.

New York, May 13 (AP).—Selling again predominated in last week's curb market trading. Major declines were suffered by industrial shares, but utilities were rather resistant, particularly late in the week.

Metals yielded in the sharp selling drive Monday, presumably due to developments concerning silver legislation. Later, however, mining shares displayed a steadier tone.

Oils followed a comparatively narrow range. Gulf Oil yielded moderately, but Standard Oil of Indiana and International Petroleum were little changed. Among alcohols, Hiram Walker encountered substantial selling at times.

The initial unsettlement was followed by improved tendencies around mid-week, but an active flurry of selling again forced the list downward on Thursday, with sizeable losses in the specialty list.

Sharp declines were suffered by Aluminum Company of America, Dow Chemical, Natomas Company, Montgomery Ward A, Murphy Company and General Tire & Rubber. Electric Bond & Share held up well near the end.

Developments of Last Week Indicate That NRA Must Eliminate Its Past Errors if It Is to Save Its Good Features.

By Ralph West Robey.

For some time it has been a common saying among critics of the NRA that it either must crack-down or crack-up. During the last week the trend quite definitely has been in the direction of cracking-up. Evidence of this has come from both within and without the organization. The NRA, to a degree that at no time has been true of any other "recovery" organization, is in retreat. Unless the current trend is changed it will be a question merely of what can be salvaged from this attempt at Nation-wide regulation and regimentation.

That there are some aspects of the plan that should be salvaged seems to be beyond question. In many directions the organization has performed a valuable service for society. It has eliminated, to a large extent, the sweatshops that for generations were a black spot in various parts of our business structure; it has established certain minimum working conditions with which a company must comply if it is to exist; and it has brought at least some degree of order out of the chaos that prevailed in some of our industries. These have been major contributions, and contributions all the more remarkable because of the short time in which they have been realized.

Reforms Accompanied By Needless Policies.

Along with these improvements, however, have gone various policies that tended to weaken the business structure, and thereby to retard lasting recovery. Outstanding in this particular have been price fixing, production control and extension of codes to lines of activity that do not lend themselves to, and can not without the greatest difficulty be subjected to, such regulation.

From the first two of these, price fixing and production control, has resulted the tendency toward monopoly that has been so evident under various codes. They also are largely responsible for placing small business units under a severe handicap. Finally, to them must be credited a substantial share of the public opposition that has developed against NRA for it has been in those industries that have production control and or price fixing that we have had the most spectacular price increases.

From the extension of codes to businesses that do not lend themselves to such regulation have come the greatest problems of enforcement and such silly episodes as jailing a tailor because he charged a nickel less than he was supposed to for pressing a suit. Needless to say a growing public resentment has followed the publication of these petty enforcement problems.

Overhauling of NRA a Difficult Task.

It is one thing, nevertheless, to divide the NRA into its good and bad features and quite a different thing to reform the organization with a view of keeping the good and eliminating the bad. This is because out of production control and price fixing has developed a situation that to a large extent is artificial. If these provisions in the codes are removed such artificiality will collapse. This means, on one side, lower prices, and on the other side, at least temporarily, reduced employment. At the same time if an attempt is made to hold prices up through continuing these provisions in the codes, these parts of the economic system will remain out of line with the rest of the business structure and consequently will keep recovery under a strain.

It is because of such problems as these that there is a real question whether even the good features of the NRA can be saved. This will involve much of what to the public will apepar as a cracking-up of the NRA, but in the long run we will be much better off if such a course is pursued than if we try to validate past errors through a policy of cracking-down.

Stocks Break To New Lows As Week Ends

Selling Rush Is Laid to Liquidation of Long Holdings.

New York, May 13 (AP).—The securities markets plowed through the third week of almost steadily declining prices this week.

The stock market found but passing comfort in the rise in the wheat market, however, since despite the higher prices, it appeared that the drought had become so severe that aggregate rural purchasing power may have been impaired. Wall street also concluded that whatever compromise were reached on silver would not prove to be particularly inflationary.

Stocks broke finally to new lows, as measured by price averages, since December.

Short selling was also said to be more active, but Wall street opinion was that the dominant factor was real liquidation of long holdings of stock.

Some disappointment was manifest that the spring rise in business had not reached higher levels before the evidences of seasonal tapering off had started to appear. Steel production continued to expand, Iron Age placing operations at 60 per cent of capacity for the first time since 1930. Steel scrap prices weakened, however, and much of the production appeared to be for inventory, which led some analysts to look for a substantial letdown in July, when it will no longer be possible to specify against old contracts at the lower prices. This seemed to prompt considerable selling in the steel shares.

Motors were also reactionary. Retail sales of automobiles were said to have improved a little, along with a pick-up in retail trade generally, as warmer weather appeared over much of the country, but automobile production declined substantially for the second successive week, which Cram's automotive reports regarded as "increasing evidence that the industry's peak operating levels for the year have passed."

Pulitzer Prize Award for Drama Still Topic of Lively Broadway Controversy

Genial Critics Defend Choice Of the Judges

Advisory Board Is Flayed; "Stingaree" Moved Up; Theater Chat.

By Nelson B. Bell.

The Broadway pundits are still discussing the 1934 Pulitzer Prize awards with some asperity.

Among the more profound thinkers of the newspaper craft the consensus seems to be that Maxwell Anderson's "Mary of Scotland" should have received the badge of greatness just as the ostensible play judges, Austin Strong, Clayton Hamilton and Walter Prichard Eaton unanimously decided.

All concede its full meed of merit to Sidney Kingsley's "Men in White," upon which the invisible board of trustees of the Columbia University's School of Journalism finally bestowed the accolade, but with reservations.

Says Mr. Percy Hammond, the perceptive chronicler of the New York Herald-Tribune: "Both of them are good, as is proved by their prosperity. Although there is only a hint of mortgage in "Men in White," it contains a seduction and a conflict between the forces of near-right and near-wrong. Medicine ponders its problems in the play, debating in combined terms of science and the stage the puzzles that complicate the existence of the serious men in white. Had I been on the Pulitzer bench, I would have adjusted my wig gravely and pronounced an opinion in favor of 'Mary of Scotland.' But 'Men in White' is okay with me. It is first-class in its idea, slightly routine in the expression of its technical and esthetic emotions and a very superior mediocrity."

"Hocus-Pocus of Stage."

And the erudite and vocal Mr. Brooks Atkinson, of the New York Times, has this to say: "In the circumstances this column has a very sincere respect for 'Men in White.' But if the advisory board asks nothing more of a play than decent principles and practicable technique it is only a pat on the back for good conduct. For 'Men in White' is only journeyman theater at its best. When you begin to try it by what the Pulitzer standards ought to be you can scarcely ignore the meretriciousness of the story device, the character hokum of the seduction scene and the long arm of Pinero coincidence that brings the heroine and the fallen virgin together for the big scene in the operating room. This is not Pulitzer drama but the hocus-pocus of the stage, and if the Pulitzer advisory board were sincerely interested in the art of the drama they would know it."

The argument that Mr. Anderson was handicapped by the fact that he had won the coveted award last year with "Both Your Houses" is effectually nullified by an exhumation of the Pulitzer records which reveal that Eugene O'Neill won the prize two years in succession with "Beyond the Horizon" and "Anna Christie" early in his emergence as America's first playwright.

It is still this department's thought, as expressed a week ago yesterday, that all this spirited discussion occasioned by the sudden rebellion of the Pulitzer trustees is as fine a spring tonic as the theater could have found.

Having observed orthodox practice for as long as his intensely revolutionary nature can stand, Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's Theater, announces that "Stingaree" the first joint starring vehicle for Irene Dunne and Richard Dix since their memorable appearance together in Edna Ferber's "Cimarron," will be presented for the first time on any screen in the Fifteenth street house on Wednesday of this week.

"Stingaree" is reputed to be executed on as sweeping a scale as its predecessor with the same stars. The scene is Australia and the leading character a sort of Antipodean Robin Hood, who steals from the rich to aid the poor. The period of the story is the picturesque 70s; its author E. W. Hornung, creator of the famous "Raffles" stories that were dramatized to such good effect as a starring vehicle for the late Kyrle Bellew years ago.

The Imperishable Hit.

Speaking of Pulitzer Prize plays, in late September "The Green Pastures," that ebony entertainment that has banged away at theatrical records for the past five years, will commence its third and final tour of the United States and Canada.

At the conclusion of the coming pilgrimage—and that will not be until March 1935—the world-famous fable that Marc Connelly fashioned from Roark Bradford's book of sketches, "Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillun," will return to Broadway for a second extended engagement.

When first presented in New York, the play ran for 640 performances, the longest Broadway engagement of any play ever awarded the Pulitzer Prize. Except for "Street Scene," the Elmer Rice prize winner of several seasons ago, no other winner of the award ever has even crossed the 300-times mark.

Second Broadway Run.

The return engagement of "The Green Pastures" in New York, it is confidently expected by its sponsors, will last for at least a full year. At the end of this run a world tour is planned for this hardy old perennial.

Except for the three deaths that have vacated two characters in the play—two Gabriels and a Noah—the cast of "The Green Pastures" this coming season will be the same as has enacted the Connelly play continuously since its first performance in New York on February 26, 1930.

In all this time, Richard B. Harrison, the 70-year-old portrayer of the Deity, has never missed a single performance of the more than 1,500 given in New York and on the road.

Representatives Sol Bloom,

straight, and Fred Bishop furnishes the tenor warbling.

On the distaff side, Ann Smith and Jackie LeMar offer good specialty routines. Minnie Mae Moore is heard in many songs, and does her best work as part of the gypsy scene, in which she is assisted by the chorus. Evelyn Brooks reveals herself in the second part of the show, and Darlin' Lucky is seen in several numbers as the premiere ballerina.

Gayety

"THE POWDER PUFF REVIEW." Hirst-Lake production, starring George Broadhurst and Ann Corio, with Minnie Mae Moore, Jackie LaMar, Anna Smith, Darlin' Lucky, Evelyn Brooks, Eddie Innis, Harry Bentley, Fred Bishop, John Barry and Joe Forte. Staged by Frank Bryant. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

It is about a year, now, since La Belle Corio last graced the local stage, and yesterday's appearance of the brunette beauty at the Gayety more than repaid for the length of time between visits, for burlesque has no Aphrodite more beauteous than Ann.

The all-too-short two numbers were visions of beauty, grace and charm; her songs coyly rendered and her dances—well, there IS only one Ann Corio!

George Broadhurst, costarring with the Corio, heads the menfolks, who are just funny enough to maintain a smooth-running performance. In his delineation of the cabaret inebriate, Broadhurst hits the high point of comedy and in his burlesque condensation of "White Cargo," where he is assisted by Ann Smith as the alluring Tondelayo, Joe Forte and Harry Bentley, he virtually epitomizes burlesque.

Harry Bentley and John Barry team up in an acceptable long-and-short combination. Forte plays the

Back From the British Studios

Formerly a star in her own right in Hollywood, more recently prominent in English-made films, the blondely beautiful Esther Ralston now returns to the American cinema in the role of a torch singer in Joan Crawford's new M-G-M vehicle, "Sadie McKee." It is as such that she is pictured above. Concerning the picture, something is to be found in Mr. Schallert's "Straight from the Studios" column.

William I. Sirovich and Isaac Bachrach will entertain theater parties at the National tonight for the first performance by the National Theater Players of "Welcome Stranger," the Aaron Hoffman comedy-drama, originally produced by George M. Cohan and Sam H. Harris as a starring vehicle for George Sidney, of more immediate fame as costar with Chalie Murray in a long list of screen comedies.

For the first time in its history, the stock company presided over by Stephen E. Cochran will import a character star to assume a role which none of the regular members of the company is equipped to play. Robert C. Fischer, a distinguished Jewish actor, will appear in the Sidney role, with the entire roster of National Players in support. Freddy Sherman, popular juvenile, returns to the Players in this offering.

River Rides Renewed.

Friday night of this week will mark the official opening of the Potomac River excursion season. On that evening the Wilson Line steamer City of Washington will pull away from its pier at the Seventh street wharf for the first moonlight trip of the summer of 1934.

According to advance word, all will be merry on the dance deck, where Lou Berman and his boys will be playing all the latest tunes. Those who do not care to dance will find interesting diversion in watching the rays from the large searchlight pick out points of historical interest along both banks of the river.

Moonlight trips will be run every night during the summer, including Sunday, until Labor Day.

Ed Sullivan, New York columnist, who soon will make a New York stage appearance on his own account, was a week-end, back-stage caller on Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon, headlining the vaudeville bill at Loew's Fox—just to say "hello," he explains, and to have a few more laughs growing out of the Sullivan-Lyon-Primo Carnera broadcast in New York the other night.

"——and Coffee at Daylight"

In the private projection room of the Fox Film Exchange today at 12 noon, which is practically the crack o' dawn in this gentlemanly profession, the local dramatic desks will be accorded a preview screening of Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard, Ethel Merman and Leon Errol in "We're Not Dressing."

Unfortunately, just at that hour, I'm afraid I will be!

Post Dwelling Holds Interest

Crowds Continue Visits Daily to Model Home on Benton Street.

The Washington Post Model Home at 3902 Benton street northwest, continues a pleasant place to the many persons who inspect it daily and are impressed with its beauty, convenient arrangement and substantial construction.

It represents the type and price of dwelling for which Washington residents have long waited. More than 6,000 persons have seen it during the time it has been open to the public.

That B. H. Gruver, it builder, has produced a great home value is evidenced by the acclaim the public has given it.

Built by Mr. Gruver, constructor of hundreds of the city's most excellent homes, this display dwelling is completely furnished by Hutchison, Inc., with draperies by John F. Ligon. It is notable for its electrically equipped kitchen and is referred to as "an electric kitchen health home."

The house will be open for inspection daily until 9 p. m., until further notice.

JOHN H. BUCKINGHAM, JR.,

Civil Service Commission, has just been awarded $100 for giving a new name, "The Square Deal," to the A. F. G. E. house organ. The Federal Diary editor and a reporter for an afternoon paper constituted the board of judges when "The Square Deal" was selected from a list of several thousand titles submitted in the A. F. G. E. contest.

A QUAINT bit of life's philosophy is contained in the following seasonal poem written by Isaac Palmer Stanfield, colored messenger in the Accounting Division of NRA, under Deputy Administrator Bradish J. Carroll, jr.

When in winter wood is scarce
Sleet and snow a pelting,
When in spring you catch a cold,
Summer time you melting;
When you have the cash in view,
Plenty to befriend you,
When you're on the mountain top
Telescopes to spy you out,
When into a ditch you drop,
The whole world passes by you,
So it ain't a bit a use to fret,
Just take things as you find it.
The best world you ever been to yet
Just laugh and never mind it.

Foreign Policy Report Warns Of War Danger

League in Peril as Fascist States Would Scrap Treaty Link.

Europe's failure to solve post-war political and economic problems and its rapid drift toward extreme nationalism confront the world with the most critical situation it has had to face since 1919, a report issued last night by the Foreign Policy Association said.

Prepared by the association's research staff under the direction of Vera Micheles Dean, the report forms one of a fortnightly series prepared by the Foreign Policy Association. "Toward a New Balance of Power in Europe" is the title of the present document.

At no time, the Foreign Policy Association finds, has the struggle between the revisionist group of powers in Europe and those defending the status quo taken so sharp a form, or led to such far-reaching readjustments in the balance of power as during the past few months.

In large measure the diplomatic conflict is the product of the foreign policy of Nazi Germany which has, as its ultimate aim, the inclusion of all German-speaking peoples in the Third Reich, the report declares.

League's Fate in Balance.

Not only is the future of the League of Nations at stake, but the whole concept of democratic methods in international affairs is in jeopardy. The danger, the report shows, comes from Fascist states, intent upon eliminating everything remotely democratic, not only from their internal affairs but from their foreign relations.

With Germany and Japan already outside the league and Italy making no bones about expressing her dissatisfaction with the way the Geneva organization is working, the showdown can not be long delayed. Italy offered a scheme for reorganization last December and made it plain at the time that her future collaboration depended upon acceptance of this or some similar program of reform. The foreign policy report takes exception to the Italian plan.

"Italy's scheme is condemned by many league supporters. They concede the covenant (of the league) would benefit by dissociation from the peace treaties, but contend the weakness of the league is due not to its organization or methods, but to the reluctance of the great powers to accept responsibility for prompt action in international crises," the report says.

Powers' Rule Feared.

Pointing out that these league supporters feel the Italian plan would aggravate rather than remedy the situation, the report goes on:

"Mussolini's plans are also opposed by France * * * and by members of the Little Entente (Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Yugoslavia) and other small states, which demand preservation of the democratic principle in international affairs and declare reform along Italian lines would merely create a dictatorship of the great powers."

The foreign policy of the Soviet Union has undergone a complete about face, the report continues, since the advent of Hitler in Germany. Before the collapse of the German Republic, Soviet Russia tended to align herself with Berlin in opposing France and her allies.

Russia Changes Front.

"Fearing Germany's demand for territorial revision may precipitate a European conflict and endanger the Soviet economic system, the U. S. S. R. has now established close ties with the status quo countries and contemplates joining the League of Nations," the report adds.

In conclusion, the report says:

"European stability must remain precarious as long as doctrines of extreme nationalism and territorial expansion dominate the foreign policies of a growing number of States * * * Persistent emphasis on aggressive nationalism may, moreover, result in the gradual isolation of the countries which preach it; this isolation in turn can easily be represented as an affront to national honor and a menace to national existence.

Deflation Tailspin Seen in Gold Price

Further Adjustment Urged by J. H. Rand, Jr.

New York, May 13 (AP).—James H. Rand, jr., chairman of the Committee for the Nation, today predicted "another tailspin of deflation" unless the price of gold is further adjusted.

"There is nothing surprising in the present collapse of commodity and security markets," he said in a statement. "It is the result of the unannounced, ill-advised agreement 3½ months ago to stop short of revaluing gold adequately to offset world conditions, and to freeze at $35 an ounce."

As a result of "an exorbitantly high value" world conditions have given gold, he continued, the dollar today buys 47 per cent more of basic commodities than the 1926 dollar.

Macon Commander Enthusiastic On Caribbean 'War' Flight

Dirigible's Value Certain to Be Established, Says Dresel.

Miami, Fla., May 13 (U.P.).—The U. S. S. Macon returned here today with Commander A. C. Dresel radiating enthusiasm over the performance of the Navy's huge dirigible in the Caribbean war maneuvers.

Swept into Miami before strong tail winds that enabled it to make 1,200 land miles in 11 hours, the giant airship docked at its temporary mooring mast at the Palooka Naval Air Field shortly after 6 a. m.

The Macon had left here Friday morning to participate in "war" games of the United States Fleet in Caribbean waters after being technically destroyed on its first trip a few days earlier.

Commander Dresel said on his return here today that he is "more than ever confident of the utilities of lighter-than-air craft being definitely established."

"We weren't shot down this time," the commander smilingly commented. "The weather was with us. We had plenty of low-hanging clouds and were able to take advantage of the conditions.

"It was much different than our first flight to the fleet when the weather was clear at all times, with visibility excellent and we were at the mercy of 'enemy' scout planes and lookout ships.

"Simulated battle conditions, in any event, are not a fair test of the worthiness of lighter-than-air craft. In the maneuvers, the problem is laid out for the benefit of all units engaged and the simulated conditions can not be changed to allow the Macon to demonstrate its possibilities.

"In war time, operating independently, the Macon would, I am convinced, demonstrate its worth more completely than under simulated war conditions."

Commander Dresel declined to reveal details of the war maneuvers and their results, saying that any detailed reports must come from the commanding officer of the fleet. The Macon, he said, will take off for its permanent base at Sunnyvale, Calif., as soon as weather conditions are most favorable.

Mt. Rainier Council Will Meet Tonight

The regular meeting of the Mount Rainier (Md.) Council will be held in the municipal building tonight at 7:30 o'clock. Mayor John H. Beall will preside. The new councilmen, Floyd B. Mathias, Third Ward, and John T. Duever, Second Ward, will be sworn.

W. R. Blandford Dies Suddenly

Well-Known Enforcement Officer Succumbs to Heart Attack.

William Roy Blandford, survivor of bootleg battles who died Saturday from a heart attack suffered during routine duty, will be accorded a military funeral at 2 p. m. tomorrow at Arlington Cemetery.

Upon enactment of repeal, the former acting prohibition administrator of the Fourth District became special investigator for the alcohol tax unit of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Blandford was stricken while on duty in an alley in the 2200 block of Fourteenth street northwest. Death occurred at Garfield Hospital. He entered the enforcement service in the Baltimore area 1929.

A captain in the World War, he was assistant provost marshal of Paris.

"Blandford was the most respected man in enforcement work in Washington," said Lieut. George M. Little, head of the police vice squad, who had been associated with Blandford throughout his investigating career here.

He was to have appeared in a joint $25,000 damage suit this morning with Lieut. Little. The suit was brought by Hammel's Restaurant, 416 Tenth street northwest. A charge of damaging property during a raid last summer was dismissed in Police Court, but carried to the District Supreme Court.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Blandford, two sons, Lieut. William O. Blandford, U. S. A., Fort Thomas, Ky., and Donald; and his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Blandford, of Crestline, Ohio.

Mrs. S. B. Milton, Leader in D. C. Activities, Dies

Received Many Life-Saving Medals; Member of Numerous Clubs.

Mrs. Samuel Burleigh Milton, 56, clubwoman, died yesterday at her residence at 3545 Sixteenth street northwest, after a week's illness.

Born in Brooklyn, the daughter of Col. John Marshall Seymour and Mary Hindes Pouder, she was married twice. She was married to Thomas Chalmers McConnell, of Indiana, in Philadelphia in 1897. Her second marriage was to the late Maj. Burleigh, Washington newspaperman, who died in 1920.

She was a member of the League of American Pen Women, D. A. R., Colonial Cavaliers, Huguenot Society, Maryland Society, Federation of Women's Clubs, and Political Study Club. She held both the silver medal and additional bar awarded by the United States Coast Guard and seven Red Cross medals for life saving.

Mrs. Milton was awarded the Bronze Medal of France and a certificate from former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker for World War service.

She was a soloist for many years in Washington and Philadelphia churches.

Surviving are a son, Chalmers Seymour McConnell; a brother, William Perry Seymour, and a sister, Mrs. Wilfred Geist Fronheiser, also of Washington.

Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Millen Brothers, Faber Lose Prison Privileges

Dedham, Mass., May 13 (AP).—Three young principals in the Millen-Faber murder trial lolled idle and alone in their cells in Norfolk County Jail today, deprived of all ordinary privileges of prisoners.

Irving and Murton Millen and their college-graduate companion, Abraham Faber, all charged with the slaying of a policeman in a bank holdup in Needham, February 2, were allowed no visitors other than their counsel, because of Irving's abortive attempt to seize the pistol of a State trooper during an exercise period Friday.

Land Tired, With Hang-Over, Ambles Elsewhere for Rest

Just a Bit of Montana, That Paid Visit Here Last Week.

By Harry Ferguson.

The Department of Interior spent the week-end thinking about this dust storm and came to the conclusion that if much more dirt is blown around the country everybody in Iowa will wake up some morning to find they are living in Oklahoma.

A Mr. Bennett, who is the department's expert on vagabond real estate, has dug into the dust storm situation pretty thoroughly. He says enough of Oklahoma already has eloped to Iowa to make the black soil around Des Moines a slightly reddish color. Whenever you see a patch of red soil, you can just put it down in your little book that Oklahoma has been running away from home again.

Montana gets foot-loose every now and then, too. We got a nice piece of Montana here in Washington last week. Not enough to go in for an extensive wheat raising, but sufficient for a truck garden. It was yellow.

Mr. Bennett reveals that the ramifications of a dust storm are practically unlimited. He got a letter from a college professor out in South Dakota who said that it got so dark around 4 p. m. that he couldn't tell whether any of his geology scholars were in the classroom. He went right on lecturing, though, and hoped for the best.

American real estate, according to Mr. Bennett, has had itching feet for years. Back in pioneer days, the settlers thought nothing of looking out the window and finding the foothills of the Rocky Mountains had ambled in overnight and camped next to the barn. It lent a sort of zest to life.

The Department of Interior has an explanation of the whole matter. American soil was young and healthy and willing to stay at home in the days before the Indians started trading Manhattan Island for a couple of jugs of firewater. Came the white man and started planting corn, wheat, potatoes and spinach. Soil, says Mr. Bennett, is just like a human being; it gets weary, loosens up and suffers a breakdown of morale.

Right now our soil is very tired indeed and has a hangover to boot. Mr. Bennett recommends a good-sized dose of erosion control and a nice long rest.

European soil goes on a jag, too, now and then, but not quite so frequently. Back in 1901, the Sahara Desert became very dissatisfied with the way things were going in Africa and decided to move over to Europe. It covered 470,000 square miles of Europe, moving practically everything out of northern Africa except the sheiks.

Spotlight Put On Ocean Mail

Kermit Roosevelt Called for Senate Probe This Week.

(United Press.)

Details of the Government's ocean mail contract will be bared this week by the Senate investigating committee, whose disclosures brought cancellation of old domestic air-mail agreements.

The committee will resume hearings today and is expected to conclude the air-mail phase of the inquiry in 48 hours. Harlee Branch, Assistant Postmaster General, has been asked to make a full report on the air-mail situation under the Administration's new policy.

The first witnesses in the ocean mail investigation will be Kermit Roosevelt, son of the late President and cousin of the present Chief Executive; P. A. S. Franklin, president of the International Mercantile Marine, and his son, John.

The three were invited to testify at the request of Senator Arthur Robinson (Republican), Indiana, who charged that the elder Franklin secretly had sent messages to Kermit Roosevelt while the latter was a guest of President Roosevelt on a yachting cruise aboard Vincent Astor's palatial yacht Nourmahal. Astor is a director of the I. M. M.

Chairman Hugo Black (Democrat), Alabama of the investigating committee, said last night he knew of no secret exchange of communications between Kermit Roosevelt and the President, but that a full inquiry would be made.

He indicated the inquiry could be completed in a short time.

Economic Aim Is "Free" Labor

American Historical Group Offers Findings of 5-Year Study.

New York, May 13 (AP).—The new, emerging economy, says the social studies commission of the American Historical Association, "promises to free the ordinary individual from the long working day, exhausting labor and economic insecurity, thus providing him with opportunities for personal development far greater and richer than those enjoyed under the individualistic economy."

The commission's document, five years in the making, is devoted largely to education's task in equipping the emerging generation to "cooperate effectively in the increasingly interdependent society and to live rationally and well within its limitations and possibilities."

"Organized public education in the United States," the report says, "much more than ever before, is now compelled, if it is to fulfill its social obligations, to adjust its objectives, its curriculum, its methods of instruction and its administrative procedures to the requirements of the emerging integrated order."

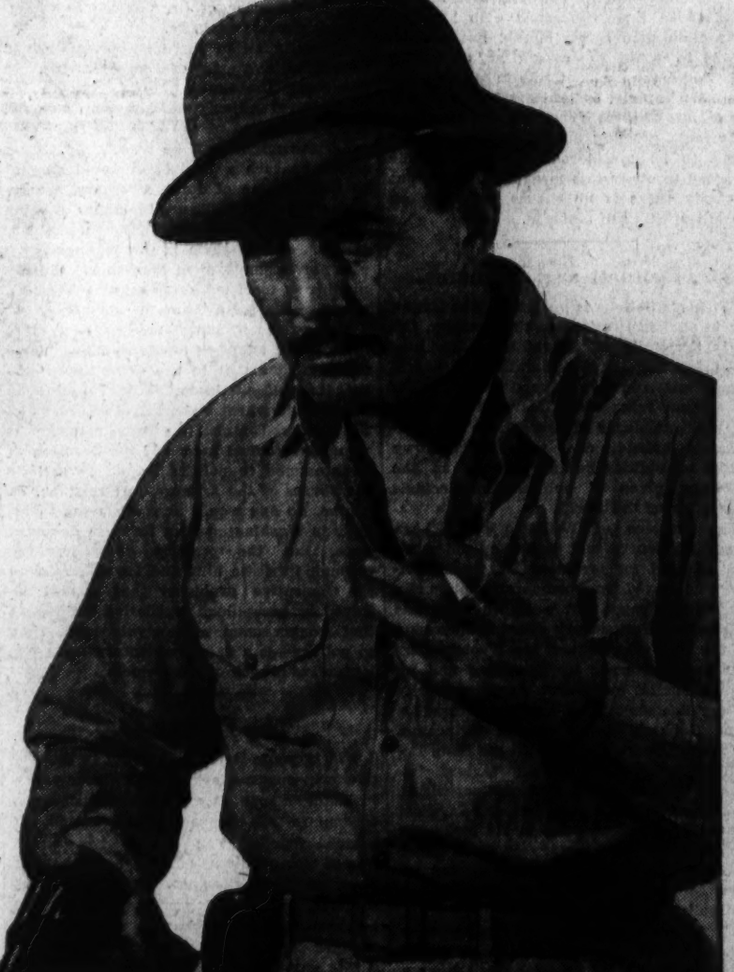
Listen to what Mrs. Abbot J. Copeland has to say on shopping—and nerves:

"There's no doubt in the world that healthy nerves are vital to a man who goes out and catches wild animals alive. But take it from a busy wife and mother who spends many hours each week searching through the stores—anxious to make the family budget reach as far as possible—you need healthy nerves to be a shopper, too! Tramping through miles and miles of aisles...pricing, comparing, judging quality and values...well, that's a test of anyone's nerves. 'Nerves' don't ever bother me, though. As for cigarettes, I smoke Camels. They don't upset my nerves. And I have never tasted such flavor and mildness."

Frank Buck, who has brought back many tons of wild cargo from the jungles of Asia, says:

"It takes healthy nerves to bring 'em back alive. It's a job packed with thrills, excitement, and real danger. I never would have been able to populate half the zoos in this country, cross the Pacific 20 times with tons of savage live cargo, and save my own life a half dozen times by quick action if I didn't have healthy nerves. I am a heavy smoker. I prefer Camels, knowing that I can safely smoke all I want without upsetting my nerves."



How Are YOUR Nerves?

Jangled nerves are apt to visit us all. You know the signs—telephone slamming, frowning, hot words that wound others, worrying and fuming over trifles.

If you are inclined toward jumpy nerves check up now—on your eating and sleeping, your habits of work and play. Make Camels your cigarette. They never get on your nerves.

Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS than any other popular brand.

If you have experienced the aftertaste often associated with flat-tasting cigarettes, or the "sweet" type, you will appreciate the mildness and rich flavor of Camels. And you can smoke them all you want. For Camel's costlier tobaccos never jangle your nerves.

A Lesson From Takoma.

Washington taxicab drivers who cross the line into Maryland are being arrested. So long as they remain within the District they are able to serve the public as common carriers without making any provision whatever to pay damages for accidents they may cause. But when cabs operating without liability insurance attempt to carry on their business in the suburbs beyond the Maryland line they are considered a menace to the community.

Coming at a time when the compulsory insurance bill covering taxicabs is before Congress, the arrests at Takoma Park serve as a pointed illustration of the laxity of our local regulations. In the Capital City taxicab drivers need not be financially responsible; in the suburbs, where traffic hazards are fewer, they must assume the obligations that common sense imputes to all public agencies of transportation. Yet a few stubborn Congressmen are blocking the measure that would tend to make taxis in Washington as safe as those operating in the suburbs.

Enforcement of the Maryland statute is not designed to work a hardship on cab drivers from Washington, but to protect the public and the transportation agencies of that State. Since Maryland cab drivers are required to establish financial responsibility, it would be obviously unfair to permit uninsured Washington drivers to compete with them. Moreover, the purpose of the statute—to protect the public against reckless and irresponsible drivers—can not be fully carried out unless it is enforced without discrimination.

Puerile arguments by Congressmen who seem to be more concerned with low taxi fares than with safety should not be permitted to defeat the compulsory insurance bill. With the accident rate in Washington mounting rapidly, compulsory insurance for the drivers of private cars who fail to satisfy judgments growing out of traffic accidents ought to be considered. Congress seems disposed to study this measure further, but certainly there is no excuse for delay on the bill relating to taxicabs.

Dr. Dennett and Williams.

Williams College is not one of the largest educational institutions in this country, but up in the Berkshire Mountains it has long stood for "intelligent liberalism in education, scholarship and common sense." Under the 26-year reign of Dr. Harry A. Garfield, the high standards of the college were excellently upheld, and the Williamstown School of Politics became famous as the gathering place of political intellectuals from all over the world.

The trustees of Williams could have chosen far less wisely than they did when they selected for president Dr. Tyler Dennett, who moved from comparative obscurity to the front pages last week when he was awarded the Pulitzer prize for his biography of John Hay. Dr. Dennett is a Westerner by birth, an Easterner by education and an internationalist by choice. As an authority on Far Eastern affairs he has lectured at Johns Hopkins, Columbia and Princeton. For several years he was with the State Department in Washington in various important editorial and advisory capacities. His interest in the department, the Far East and the United States led to his biography of Hay, who was Secretary of State under McKinley and Roosevelt and who was responsible for the declaration of the open door policy in China.

But what is really significant in his selection as a college president, it seems, is that Williams has named as its head neither a business man nor a professional educator. It has reverted to the old tradition of selecting a scholar, rather than one whose primary energies would be devoted to the raising of funds for stadia or to teaching as a profession. If this is old-fashioned New England conservatism, it is also common sense and liberalism in the best use of the word.

"Blind Buyers."

Addressing the Consumers' League of Cleveland, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Tugwell said that the 30,000,000 families who spend 60 per cent of the National income over retail counters "all too often do not know what they are buying." Mr. Tugwell thinks that the "time has come for consumers to organize if they are ever going to." In his opinion, "they can still exert some pressure through the market, but also they can influence governmental policies." This advice is sound, provided certain reservations are attached. It ought not to be forgotten, however, that a grave responsibility rests upon those who undertake to guide consumer buying. Standardization and grading of products under Government supervision, to protect consumers against exploitation, are essential, and much more needs to be done along this line. But the suggestion that consumers should organize to "exert pressure through the markets" has an ominous sound.

The average consumer is not competent to judge either the quality of the goods he buys or the fairness of the prices charged, because of the intricacies of the modern price-making process and the variety of articles offered for sale. Consequently organized consumer groups are capable of inflicting great and undeserved damage upon blameless merchants by heeding the advice of ill-informed or prejudiced persons who set themselves up as expert judges. There is an ever-present danger that protective consumer organizations may be converted into boycotting agencies by ignorant or zealous injunctions not to patronize this or that concern on the ground that it deals unfairly.

Sprinting For Adjournment.

Congress always becomes fidgety with the approach of summer in election years. As the political caldrons "back home" begin to steam up members of both the House and Senate are inclined to drop their labors in Washington and take up the much more pleasant task of formulating new pledges to the electorate. This year is no exception. In spite of the fact that Congress is still confronted by a rather heavy legislative program, the drive for adjournment has begun.

It is difficult to find any logic in speeding up the legislative machinery in May because elections will be held in November. Primary elections are being conducted in some States, but these ought not to disrupt the work of Congress. Administration leaders would be in a very embarrassing position if they should desert the so-called recovery front in Washington for the political front out on the hustings before the legislative program is properly completed.

Representative Byrns, Democratic leader in the House, says that body will be "packed up and ready to go home" by May 25. In other words, he believes that the House can complete its work in about 10 legislative days. Yet there are seven major bills on its calendar, and at least two more which ought to be considered. In addition several important measures now in conference must go before the House for further action. Apparently the House leaders are ready to dispose of one or more major problems per day so that Congressmen may add a few additional days or weeks to the five months they will have for electioneering.

In the Senate the calendar is more congested. Approval of ten important measures, some of them very intricate and controversial, is sought by the Administration. These include the bill to create a communications commission, the commodity exchange regulation bill, a measure extending intermediate credit to industry, the reciprocal tariff bill, the emergency housing plan, extension of the temporary bank deposit guarantee, a bill to tighten the grip of the AAA on agriculture, the District appropriations bill, the proposed addition of $1,322,000,000 to the President's emergency fund, and confirmation of Dr. Tugwell as Undersecretary of Agriculture.

Virtually all of these measures demand thoughtful and extensive consideration. In discussing the Smith amendments to the agricultural adjustment act, for example, the whole trend of the experiment in crop reduction might well be scrutinized. Hasty action on such a vital issue would amount to a dereliction of duty. Moreover, a number of important bills are in danger of being lost if this spurt for early adjournment continues. Among them is the Wagner-Lewis plan for unemployment insurance. Quite a number of local measures may be sacrificed to the mania for five-month campaigns.

One of the strongest arguments used to bring about adoption of the so-called "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution was that it would eliminate the short sessions of Congress in which a great deal of hasty and ill-considered legislation was passed. It would be ironical indeed if the devotion of Congressmen to politics should perpetuate the abuses of the former short sessions. Of course, no one would urge Congress to remain in Washington after its work has been done. But the practice of railroading through intricate bills and turning over to the Executive problems that should be solved by scrupulous legislative action—so that Congressmen may devote more time to politics—is a sad commentary upon our legislative branch of government.

The Living Age.

Ninety years is old whether it is the age of a man or a magazine. But ninety years, in history's span, is a brief period of time. It was in 1844 that Eliakim Littell, of Boston, founded The Living Age, which was a compendium of the best thought from across the waters on all sorts of subjects, political, literary, artistic and fashionable. Since then the magazine has changed format, but, with the exception of a few numbers, it has always maintained its original policy. It is celebrating its ninetieth birthday with a special number which is made more interesting by the inclusion of reprints from its old pages.

Some of these reprints suggest that human nature does not change much; others could be used as proof that human standards change a great deal. There are two letters of advice to young people that would not be read beyond the first sentence, except for amusement, by young people today. Were they taken seriously 60, 70 years ago?

Reading these excerpts from the files of the past makes one want to moralize upon the evolution of ideas, until one realizes the futility of doing so. It was, after all, another world when Eliakim Littell began pasting up the English exchanges. Texas had not become part of the United States; the Civil War was yet to be fought. People had different ideas, led different lives than they do now. But they realized that civilization would not remain as they knew it. They saw that a "rapid progress of change" was going on, and the world was coming to "a new state of things which the merely political prophet can not compute or foresee."

It is, of course, a mistake to assume that sweeping alterations or upheavals are peculiar to our own age. History is always dynamic in the making. Sometimes the flow of events is smoother than it appears to be today, yet we are inclined to forget the momentous issues of the past or to minimize them in comparison with current difficulties. This attitude is no less a delusion than is the belief that current experiments can iron out all of the rough spots of future decades.

The Wheat Conference Fails.

The international wheat conference has collapsed, because Argentina has refused to agree to minimum prices for export wheat, and is demanding an increase in the export quota assigned her under the agreement reached last August. Secretary Wallace, who is "exceedingly disappointed" by the failure of the conference, warns the wheat growing nations that if an agreement is not reached, this country may abandon its domestic control plan and engage in a competitive contest in world wheat markets.

"With the mechanism of the AAA," he says, "it would be possible for the United States to meet with its surplus wheat any kind of competition that might be established by other nations, and at the same time aid the cooperating growers to get comparative prices for the domestically consumed portion of the crop."

Mr. Wallace speaks lightly, almost casually, of this alternative. His warnings probably will not be taken very seriously by countries selling wheat at prices far below those now prevailing in American markets. The North Pacific Emergency Export Association reports that the average differential between domestic and world prices on approximately 25,000,000 bushels of wheat which it has sold for export amounted to about 23 cents per bushel. The cost of such subsidized exporting has been met by allocating for this purpose 2 cents per bushel out of the 30-cent processing tax on the milling of wheat.

It is evident, therefore, that our domestic price-raising policy is incompatible with the maintenance of an export market for wheat, unless the Government is prepared to offer substantial export bonuses for every bushel shipped abroad. If "dumping" of wheat should be undertaken on the extensive scale suggested by Secretary Wallace, importing countries would increase their tariffs, impose more stringent quotas, or in various ways neutralize the effect of the subsidies paid to American growers. We should not only be adding to the burdens of our taxpayers, but we should be encouraging an expansion of the wheat area and further overproduction.

During each of the last six years world wheat supplies have greatly exceeded world requirements. With wheat importing countries adding constantly to restrictions upon imports and stimulating domestic production, with consumption reduced by prolonged depression, and with heavy carryovers from previous years, it was evident that a mere agreement to control exports and to stabilize prices would not solve the wheat problem. Dependence must be placed upon slow processes of adjustment. So far as the United States is concerned, nature is helping to reduce the amount of our available export surplus. But so long as we follow the present price raising program, nothing but subsidies will enable us to sell our wheat in world markets.

Presto!

Representative Somers' suggestion that Congressmen be put in uniform is not without its good points, although it might have been more desirable a few months ago before opposition to the New Deal became as pronounced as it is now. Just what the design of the uniform should be is not easy to visualize. There have been times when a conical hat of white paper would have met with approval. A good many other designs might be suggested. Perhaps if the Congressman could be made for a while to wear the uniform the cartoonists have bestowed upon the taxpayer—the barrel, and nothing else—some good might be accomplished.

Even more interesting is Mr. Somers' suggestion regarding the coinage of a 3-cent piece made out of magnesium. Such coins would be light, he says, and would not wear out one's pockets. Solicitude on the part of a Congressman for the public pocket is in itself a novelty. But Mr. Somers goes further than that. His secondary purpose in recommending magnesium 3-cent pieces is medicinal. "If you have acidosis," he says, "you could place the magnesium in your mouth, and presto! No more acidosis."

It appears, however, that he has brought forth this magic a little too late. A year ago the Administration told the country that a slice could be cut from the dollar and presto! there would be no more depression. The public is skeptical now.

No, sir; spring or no spring, we're not going to putter around in a garden. Just look what happened to Adam.

The Eskimo language consists of an extremely limited number of words, we read. But, then, very little happens to an Eskimo worth talking about, anyway.

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA is reported to have left a million dollar fortune in rare jewels. She was taken ill aboard a steamer and, having a premonition of her death, drew up a will three days before she died in Batavia.

BOUCK WHITE, noted clergyman, author and Socialist, was sentenced to jail for his part in the recent disturbance at the Cavalry Baptist Church, New York, when he and others led a protest over the Rockefellers' treatment of Colorado miners. With Miss Milo Woodman he was sent to the workhouse.

TEN YEARS AGO TODAY.

THE POTOMAC RIVER was on a rampage. It had already done thousands of dollars of damage. Four were dead. Scores were homeless. The river was eight feet higher than normal.

Smokers' Rights.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The little controversy on cigarettes, smokers' rights, &c., reminds me of a stanza by James Walton, which might be of interest:

"I have walked in summer meadows, where the sunbeams flashed and broke,
But I never saw the cattle nor the sheep nor horses smoke;
I have watched the birds with wonder when the grass with dew was wet,
But I never saw a robin puffing at a cigarette.
I have fished in many a river where the sucker crop was ripe,
But I never saw a catfish puffing at a briar pipe.
Man's the only living creature that pervades this vale of tears,
Like a blooming traction engine puffing smoke from nose and ears;
If Dame Nature had intended when she first invented man
That he'd smoke, she'd have built him on a widely different plan.
She'd have fixed him with a stovepipe and a damper and a grate,
And she'd had a smoke consumer that was strictly up to date."

Surely it's a free country, but why shouldn't the smoking man or woman, if he or she sees that some nonsmoker is forced by circumstances to breathe the foul smoke, show just a little human kindness and consideration, especially to women and children?

However, no argument is ever settled by verbal retaliation and cutting scarcasm. You have your rights, I have mine. Let's respect the other fellow's rights as far as possible and be at peace with all men. CHEERY CHARLEY.

Washington, May 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your correspondent, M. E. H. (the one who thought my letter was "very funny"), makes it necessary for me to explain that I was referring to a theater in another country, where I was nauseated by being forced to inhale tobacco smoke. However, one need only remain in the lobbies of Constitution Hall during intermission, and receive the same effect—of being saturated with tobacco smoke—that is achieved in other places where this "vile indulgence" (I quote your correspondent) is permitted.

In any case, why evade the point at issue? M. E. H. knows as well as I do that my claim to the right to breathe pure air is justifiable. And I do not dispute his right to smoke; I only ask him not make me smoke with him.

Kindly inform M. E. H. that Miss Shaw has lived on three continents, and knows what she is writing about when she refers to the disgusting experience of being forced to indulge in a second-hand smoke. MURIEL SHAW.

Washington, May 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I ask M. E. H. when the two certain movie houses, one on Fifteenth street and the other on Columbia road were condemned as movie houses of the very poorest class? I should like to know, for the reason that when I went in those places I was under the impression that I was entering fairly decent theaters. I sat in the balconies and had smoke blown into my face.

May I say, M. E. H., that I know from personal experience that air laden with tobacco smoke can cause considerable trouble to the mucous membranes of some persons, and that this trouble may turn into cataarh of such membranes or a sort of chronic hay fever. Pleasant—so what?

Wrote Sarcastic.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Do I read rightly? The Cherry Blossom festival, plus the military and commercial addenda to the parade, netted some $30,000 to $40,000, and filled all hotels, rooming houses and parking places despite the rainy season. Then why not a Dandelion festival? Let's hurry! Put the unemployed on the Capitol green, White House lawn, &c., armed with sharp knives and market baskets and have them—the unemployed of course—dig out the golden blooms.

Don't forget to notify the sound pictures, newspaper rotogravures, country cousins, &c. Have the "ladies in cheese cloth" produce one of their famous hopping adagios, and the village choir might attempt some sort of a dandelion masque with incidental music. Don't forget the parade, (Marine Band, Army mounted troops, trade store floats, peanut venders, auto superplus exhibits, &c.

And, oh yes, to encourage the unemployed as they dig the golden blooms for the newsreel, why not have Elder Michaux's wonderful singers carol, croon or yodel "Happy Am I?" Our First Lady might represent the Administration in a short radio boardcast. Perhaps some of our Congressmen's wives might have a new dandelion frock to exhibit. Then let one broadcast a NRA (Not Responsible Anyhow) recipe for real, real dandelion wine!

There's gold in these here festivals! Would we could have the whole thing up North to dear old Boston. We could throw a couple of ultra-aura-tinted cults in, and, allezoop! Cherry blossom receipts would seem immaterial!

Faith in American People.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have faith that the inherent common sense of the American people will always prevail in any serious crisis.

I have faith that the organized brains of the American people will solve the country's difficult problems.

I have faith that the sense of justice of the American people will establish right relations between capital and labor, so that all will honorably fulfill their mutual obligations.

I have faith that the sense of humor of the American people will protect them against spurious schemes, shibboleths, and slogans.

I have faith that the inherent independence of the American people will always insure to this country freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and religious liberty.

I have faith that the persistence and thoroughness of the American people will ultimately rid this country of anarchists, infidels, traitors, mischief-makers and lawbreakers of every kind.

I have faith that the Christian spirit of the American people will cause them to look more and more to God for guidance, to keep Christ enthroned as the standard of human perfection, and to labor diligently for universal peace and harmony.

Out of the turmoil of social and economic upheaval will come a better day for all classes of pepole, a clearer vision of life's possibilities, and still greater opportunities for useful and unselfish service.

Insanitary Living Conditions.

To the Editor of The Post: Sir—Most of the men living here are employed at the Government Experimental Stations, and they must live very near the farm in order to hold their jobs. Most of them receive low pay—yet, even so, they must pay from a fourth to half their wages for rent. In almost any other country town they could, for the same amount of money, live decently. Here, for $20 to $25, they receive only a shell of a house, often one in which plaster and wall paper are both missing, and in which electricity is the only convenience.

In one section of the town the renters are cautioned not to use their wells for drinking purposes, because they contain typhoid fever germs. In the section where the renters can not use their wells, water must be fetched from a very sanitary (?) spring located beside a much used highway.

At the farms, where these men work, are found the most sanitary conditions. Why can't the men caring for these animals have the same decent living conditions? And why can't the man who pays his rent demand at least a house in which the plaster does not fall from the walls, and in which there is at least a clean water supply?

Many industrial employers take a keen interest in the living conditions of their employes—often to the extent of furnishing, at a minimum rental, houses which are modern and comfortable. Why can't the Government do the same? It is investigating living conditions in other sections of the country. This is quite close to home, and it seems as though some one ought to do something for these people, without delay. A. J. SHANE.

Spanish Custom

An old Spanish custom was able to render a more obvious service to mankind than usual Wednesday when a former toreador in Madrid slew a bull which had gone berserk in the Central Market there. El toro, escaping from a slaughter-house early in the morning, proceeded to comment editorially on man's craze for beefsteak by charging amain various public stores of garlic, cabbages, beans and potatoes, set out thoughtfully against the morning trade.

As it happened, Antonio Sanchez, fortified perhaps with Malaga and mellow memories of his former pomp and circumstance as a Madrid bull-fighter, was wending his way home. He saw the bull, whose tossing horns, enwreathed all with cress and produce of the field, were developing in witnesses the general thought, "Come one, come all, this rock shall fly from its firm base as soon as I."

Sanchez leaped home and returned with his trusty, if somewhat rusty, muleta sword. The bull's vegetable orgy now ceases, and under the flickering street lamps one sees the old maestro, though without benefit of either picadors or banderilleros, bringing the bull into proper position by means of technical passes. The estocada which crowned the suerte de matar was, dispatches said, superb, not given a-volapie, as is the temptation of weaker men, but recibiendo.

Since 1040, when Don Roderigo Diaz de Vivar first brought death in the afternoon to a selected member of the taural species, those in high places have tried to stop bull-fighting. Ferdinand II was one of several Spanish monarchs who failed even to curtail this popular Iberian pastime. Popes have more than once excommunicated those who brawled with bulls.

It seems, in sooth, to non-Latins and horse lovers, an evil business. But now after centuries, the custom, as shown by Sanchez, has proved that it can render a direct social service. What per cent of the world's curious and well-nigh infinite customs would stand up if put to the same test?

The Post Impressionist

Postoffice, Monday.

WEIGHTY rumors rumble across the Atlantic from Geneva. The League of Nations issues a startling report on the war between Bolivia and Paraguay—in spite or because of which, the Armaments Conference may be resumed with hope of an agreement. A new gathering of the powers (America included) may be called to deal with the latest phases of Japanese policy toward China. But what most worries the newspaper correspondents usually assigned to "cover" such convocations—and what should therefore worry you—is a still unsubstantiated rumor that G. V. Ward may not be there.

For Ward is your friend. Upon G. V. has depended the issuance of 90 per cent of the "spot news" you have ever received concerning any No. 1 international conference held anywhere in Europe since 1922.

* * * *

"Spot news." We are not now talking about the "tip-offs" which a correspondent occasionally gets from some delegate. We are not talking of the statements let loose when the head of this or that delegation "meets the press"—no, nor yet of the "news" handed out by those "press-liaison officers" who accompany most delegations.

We are talking about official news, which bears the stamp of the conference as a whole.

The fountain of such news for most conferences is the League of Nations' information section. It manages all that sort of thing in Geneva. Because of its familiarity with the routine of these conclaves, it is asked to send—and does send—a staff to handle the "information" of nearly every conference held anywhere else.

It has lots of other duties, too, but its most nerve rackingly time-pressing duty is this of getting out the spot news on the spot. It has lots of able officers—men from 14 nations—but the officer directly responsible for the mechanics of this duty is G. V. Ward.

* * * *

The conference meets; even if its session is public, the best correspondent can't hear all that is said and immediately transmit all that is news. But, close beneath the tribune, Ward has posted two miracle-working stenographers, whom she relieves every half hour by two others. The relieved pair run to a room under Ward's direction where they dictate their notes to girls at typewriters, making one "original" and a couple of carbon copies. Ward keeps one copy for the files, sends another for editing by the delegate whose words it records, takes the third direct to the press-room and tacks it on a bulletin board.

Long before the last part of a normally lengthy speech has been delivered in the conference-hall, the correspondents in the press-room can be transcribing its beginnings. Those beginnings may be in the newspaper on your Washington desk before the conference-delegates have heard the end of the speech in Europe.

And your unknown friend who made this possible for you is G. V. Ward.

* * * *

Miss G. Vera Ward, who always signs herself just "G. V. Ward," is British. And she is probably the most efficient office-manager in the world.

* * * *

But she is also the world's greatest autocrat. The dictators could take lessons from her. If a correspondent fails to satisfy the strictly impartial, severely high, journalistic standards of Miss Ward, that correspondent might almost as well abandon any attempt to benefit by her tremendous ability.

For instance: She will permit no nearsighted newspaperman to detach those reports that she has tacked to the bulletin board. What he wants he must do his best to copy among his shouldering colleagues. Otherwise, he must await the second process: In the transferroom, smoother, more carefully edited versions are being read to typists who stencil them on wax paper, wherefrom rotographs, or roneo-machines, will grind out copies for personal distribution. But take one of those first copies from the bulletin board—and G. V. will make you ashamed of yourself.

She is Supreme Potentate of the Press Room. She is Hegemonic Margravine of the Press-Seats in the Conference Hall.

* * * *

Swarms of correspondents attend a conference. Lots of them will be men or women new to the scene, yet, within 24 hours, Miss Ward knows each. Sometimes a newcomer will have the hardihood to lend his ticket to a nonjournalistic acquaintance who wants a glimpse of the Great Show. The acquaintance may pass a dozen doorkeepers, for they rarely look at the photographs adorning admission cards. But Miss Ward will spot the interloper unerringly.

She advances atiptoe—the mouser approaches the rat. A tap on the guilty shoulder. Is the response a bluff? The czarina has a nod that launches terror, compels obedience. She nods first at the intruder, next at the door—and the former shamefacediy fades through the latter.

* * * *

G. V. is jealous for her journalist's privileges. The Press-Room is reserved exclusively for correspondents, and she enforces the reservation. One fevered afternoon, she looked in and saw a stranger. Him, too, she tapped.

"What newspaper do you represent?"

"I am not a correspondent."

"Quite. So you mustn't be here."

"But," truthfully protested the wretch, "I am the accredited delegate of the —— Government to the present conference."

"I know it. So you mustn't be in this room."

And he didn't linger.

* * * *

If there is anything in the rumor of G. V's. resignation, it must mean that another country is going dictator and is wise enough to have chosen Miss Ward for its boss. But her donning of that new purple will spell the ruin of the next conference.

Carlisle Bargeron

HERE is the way in which some editors I know would discuss the dust storm which swept out of the West and darkened our fair city:

Many people have found the dust storm which threw a pall over our midst quite disagreeable. It rendered what would have been very clear skies murky and caused particles to fly in one's eye and also caused one's lips to become dry. Upon leaving one's house for the first time after the dust had come one was first impressed with the general cloudiness and then with the thickness of the air. One's first thought was that there was a great conflagration nearby, that the smoke and embers were settling over our community.

BARGERON.

Then there came the recollection of the stories which had been appearing in the newspapers about the great dust storms which were laying low the crops of the Middle West. Could it be that we are getting some of this dust, one asked.

* * * * *

Inquiry at the Weather Bureau and at local newspapers revealed that was exactly what we were getting. Amazement was expressed that this could be so. It is one of the phenomena of nature that dust picked up from the wheat lands of the Middle West could be blown so far, that the elements would carry this dust in their atmospheric pouches for so long a distance.

Housewives of the Nation's Capital were put to considerable inconvenience. Many of them were engaged in doing their spring cleaning or having their spring cleaning done. As one well knows, whether a housewife is doing her spring cleaning or having it done the windows of one's house are likely to be thrown wide open. The result, most naturally, was that when the housewife either finished with her spring cleaning or with having had it done, the house was in worse shape than it had been before. This, of course, is provoking. To that extent, then, one might well upbraid the Administration and insist that it take steps immediately to put an end to this inconvenience.

* * * *

On the other hand, there were pleasant features about the dust. It gave us an unusual layer, a colorful hue and set up sort of a mysterious haze about our monumental structures such as the Washington Monument, the Capitol and Lincoln Memorial. There were times when one could not see their sheer majesty through the gloom. This caused one to think whether or not they were still there.

Thought of this kind, thought about the uncertainty of things is frequently good for one's soul. It causes one to realize that there is after all of us something utterly beyond our control. It is this occasional thinking that keeps one's feet on the ground.

We had the opportunity, too, in this instance, to consider the advantages of our city as a place of residence, and of the efficient service which our Commissioners render. We do not ordinarily have the inconvenience that other cities of the country have.

* * * *

It is a fact, too, that some of our most substantial and law-abiding citizens live in the Middle West whence this dust came. They are given to agriculture and this experience comes as an illustration of some of the hazards which these hardy people face.

We have many Middle Westerners in our midst. They belong to our State societies and serve in our Government. We meet them frequently in our department stores and we know that while many of them are tillers of the soil, they are in no wise like the dust that followed them. The truth is more likely that they came here hoping to escape it, but that like the loyal dog, it followed them.

Mr. Roosevelt is a good man. He is not in favor of dust. Probably some of the men around him are bringing the dust here without his knowledge. He has so much to do. But we are confident that he will make a study and take the necessary steps to eliminate it.

I'll give one guess as to what editor or which editors I have in mind.

Equal Rights Treaty Pushed

President Studies Pact for Pan-American Women's Advance.

The Equal Nationality Treaty, signed by all but one of the American Republics gathered at Montevideo last December in the Pan-American Conference, has been placed upon President Roosevelt's desk with a recommendation from Secretary of State Hull that it be submitted to the Senate for consent to ratification, it was learned yesterday.

The certified copy of the treaty, which guarantees women the same rights in respect to nationality as those accorded men, arrived from Montevideo last week. It was hurried through the State Department and sent over to the White House for transmission to the Senate.

In view of the Senate's passage last week of a bill to remove all remaining discriminations against women in this country's nationality laws, it is believed ratification will be a matter of form.

Meanwhile the supervisory committee of the Pan-American Union here decided the treaty is open to all nations and not, as has often been the case with agreements reached at Pan-American conferences, only open to American countries. Announcement of this decision was made by Miss Doris Stevens, chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women, who led the fight for the treaty in Montevideo.

The treaty, Miss Stevens said, is the first piece of international feminist legislation in history and as such, of immense significance to women everywhere. All ratifying countries are pledged to accord women whatever nationality rights they grant men, Miss Stevens said.

Post Contest Winners Join In Radio Event

Are Presented by Officials From Universities They Will Attend.

Three boys and two girls, winners of finals in The Washington Post Scholarship Competition, were presented last night to the radio audience of WMAL by the National Broadcasting Co., and read excerpts from the original essays on Governmental subjects with which they have each won a four-year tuition scholarship to a local university.

Introducing them were officials from the universities in which the winners will enroll next fall. Eugene MacLean, general manager of The Post, presided and congratulated the winners, both on their superior scholarships in essays and final tests, and on their awards.

Dr. William F. Notz, dean of the School of Foreign Service of Georgetown University, introduced the winner of his school's scholarship, Chester Davis, of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School, who read excerpts from his essay on "The Social Philosophy of the New Deal."

Read From Essays.

Dr. George B. Woods, dean of the College of Liberal Arts of American University, presented the winners of two scholarship awards at his college, Margaret Hill, of the Hampstead (Md.) High School, and Raymond Wrenn, of the Herndon (Va.) High School. Miss Hill read from her essay on "Problems of National Defense," and Wrenn from his paper on "Reorganization of Local Government."

Dr. Charles H. Wesley, head of the history department of Howard University, introduced Ernestine Greene, of Cardoza High School, this city, who read from her paper on "Fascism, Communism and Democracy."

Joseph M. Murphy, director of public relations of the Catholic University of America, presented Earle W. Martyn, of the local Eastern High School, who read from his paper on "Constitutional Implications of the Recovery Program."

Each of the university officials urged that The Post establish the competition as an annual event.

MacLean Explains Purposes.

Mr. MacLean explained the competition's process of operation and the purposes for which it was organized.

"It seemed to us," he said, "that nowhere else could a project of this type be projected with such splendid results as here in the Nation's Capital, where activities of world importance are matters of daily occurrence and where the universities sponsoring this competition serve as ideal centers for the unbiased observation and interpretation of these events. The response which has been accorded The Post by these four universities, as well as by the pupils and officials of the secondary schools of this territory, has confirmed the value of a contribution such as this toward better citizenship."

Mr. MacLean invited the continued cooperation of the four universities in succeeding Washington Post Scholarship Competitions.

Admirals to Study Macon's "Failure"

Disputed value of the dirigible Macon in fleet maneuvers will be reviewed this week by Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations, and Rear Admiral Ernest J. King, naval aviation chief.

King today flew to Miami, the Macon's temporary basis. He will be joined there tomorrow by Standley, who has been with the fleet during most of its extensive war games in the Caribbean. They will inspect aviation bases on the East Coast and are expected to devote considerable time to an informal review of the Macon's tests with the fleet.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Russia Takes a Turn for the Worse.

Soviet Russia has launched an Own-Your-Own-Car movement among the workers. This would seem to indicate that Stalin is slipping and is anxious to see the people too busy with Sunday picnic plans to notice what is going on.

* * * *

Maybe his latest five-year plan depends for its success on a national traffic jam which the lowliest peasant can enjoy.

* * * *

The Russian masses may think they have suffered enough, but they won't know what anguish is until they have to go through the ordeal of getting nine people and a dog in a four-passenger flivver, driving to the country in Sunday traffic and then finding the box-lunch full of red ants.

* * * *

And after one experience trying to back an 8-foot car into a 4-foot parking space any Russian will be willing to admit that life under the old Czarist regime was soft.

* * * *

Stalin is even encouraging workers to buy cars on the time-payment plan. This reflects a strange determination to transfer the people's minds from the subject "Is Sovietism a Success?" to "Why Will an Auto Manuafacturer Spend Years in Developing a Good Car for $500 and Still Throw in a Thirty-five-Cent Kit of Tools?"

* * * *

The question for the Soviet bosses to consider gravely is this: Can a nation that is half auto owner and half installment collector endure?

* * * *

Students of history, traffic and Sunday outings believe Stalin is making his first major mistake in trying to put Russia in rumble seats. Up to this moment the Russians believe they have been making rapid progress.

* * * *

Another NRA Problem.

2,000 Homeless In Portugal Storm

Hail Sweeps From Peaks; Many Injured.

Lisbon, Portugal, May 13 (AP).—A terrific rain and hail storm swept down the eastern side of the Serra da Estrella, Portugal's highest mountain ridge, last night, leaving 2,000 persons homeless in peasant villages.

Many peasants were reported seriously injured, but crippled communications prevented compilation of a casualty list.

Reports to government officials, who rushed assistance, were that many of the refugees were without food and that many were on the verge of complete exhaustion after their night-long struggle to escape the avalanches which poured down the mountain slope.

CCC Near Peak; 302,000 Enrolled

Transfer to Summer Camps Finished This Month.

With the enrollment of 100,000 boys and men during the last five weeks, the Civilian Conservation Corps has been brought back close to peak strength, Robert Fechner, director of Emergency Conservation Work, announced yesterday.

The aggregate forest camp strength, including CCC workers, 9,000 Indians and men employed in Hawaii, Puerto Rico and Alaska, now is approximately 302,000

The movement of camps from winter to summer locations will be completed late this month, Fechner announced. The number of CCC camps will be 1,468, with each State having at least two camps.

When Everybody Talks About Fire, Somebody Will Start One

By Robert Quillen

If you were a grocer and your rival in business gave you a brusque warning to quit selling flour to his neighbors, you would be sorely tempted to answer impolitely and prepare for battle.

But if you were selling liquor to the man's neighbors, and liquor made them a menace to his life and property, his demand that you quit would seem more reasonable.

When some statesman suggested that China's manpower be used to help the Allies overwhelm Germany, Japan vetoed the suggestion immediately. She dared not permit the awakening and arming of her great neighbor.

Now Japan is determined to subdue and dominate China, and the first item of her strategy is an impolite declaration that she will not permit other nations to equip the Chinese for war.

Ajax defying the lightning could not impress beholders more.

To the Chinese it means the death of hope. Japan is strong enough to defy the world. China has no friend to take up arms in her defense.

As a matter of fact, Japan is able to make such a grandstand play because she is willing to fight and she knows full well that other nations are not.

Well, why should Americans think of fighting? If they were trying to keep Mexico harmless, they would tolerate no arming of the Mexicans by Japanese. And Japan's right to establish an Asiatic "Monroe Doctrine" can not be disputed by a nation that set the example.

If irresponsible people keep on talking and thinking about a war between America and Japan, war there will be when the time is ripe.

And it won't be a distant war, easily won. If the Japanese strike before declaring war, as they doubtless will—not being handicapped by any such idealistic nonsense as chivalry—little yellow men may land on the Pacific Coast before America is ready to begin fighting.

The future may bring some reason for war, but there is none now. And any talk of war is a foolish meddling with dynamite.

Curran Urges Pension Rolls Drop 256,000

Declares That Number of Veterans Undeserving of U. S. Help.

New York, May 13 (AP).—Henry H. Curran, director of the National Economy League, declared today that 256,000, or 37 per cent, of the 687,000 war veterans and dependents now drawing Government pensions should be stricken from the rolls.

To these pensioners the Government will pay $133,000,000 this year, Curran said in a survey of veterans' benefits under the independent offices appropriation bill.

This money, he said, will be spent "in violation of the principle of generous treatment for truly war-disabled veterans and their dependents, but no gratuities for those who returned from war whole and well," for which the National Economy League stands.

Citing the elimination of 400,000 World War veterans from the rolls, Curran called the saving involved "a great victory" for "those who have been fighting for sound principles in veterans' legislation."

The report said 222,000 Spanish-American War veterans have been restored to the rolls under the bill. The league contends 200,000 of these should not be there.

Of the 465,000 World War veterans drawing pensions, Curran declared 56,000 should be eliminated.

"These unwarranted pensions cost the American people $95,000,000 a year in contrast with the total annual cost of all pensions of $378,000,000," he asserted.

"This last figure refers to pensions alone and does not have to do with costs of administration, hospital treatment, insurance, bonus and other matters, which come to over $250,000,000 a year, bringing the total Federal cost of veterans' benefits to about $629,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1934."

Action Urged On Commodity Exchange Bill

Move Started to Induce Congress to Consider Control Measure.

(Associated Press.)

A move was under way last night to induce Congress promptly to match its stock exchange control bill with a companion bill to regulate commodity exchanges.

The probability arose that the commodity bill would be taken up in at least one house the latter part of this week, with announcement by Chairman Jones, of the House Agricultural Committee that he would ask the Rules Committee to give it privileged status on the calendar.

In the Senate, the drive for passage has been less in evidence, although similar sentiment exists there. One of the major arguments for passage of the commodity control measure is that closing the stock exchange to wild speculation would shift gambling elements to the commodity markets.

The House Agriculture Committee has said that this transfer of speculation might mean "possibly dangerous results to producers of commodities."

"It is even conceivable," a statement by the committee said, "that certain interests not in sympathy with the agricultural program will, through short selling and undercover dealing in the speculative markets, endeavor to defeat and destroy it."

The stock exchange bill passed by the House proposes marginal regulation by the Federal Trade Commission; the Senate measure would have it by a special commission. The commodity control bill the House committee reported out proposes control by a separate commission.

The commodity bill sets no margin requirements. It does provide, however, that margin money be considered trust funds and not to be used for margin unless deposited or pledged with a bank.

"Shark! Shark!"

There are innumerable commonly accepted statements that are either doubled or denied by individuals who are or think they are superior. For example, if you wish to turn a peaceful, placid dinner party into a tumultuous scene of angry debate, all you have to do is to suggest that the mole has no eyes.

When this question has finally begun to lose interest (it will not be settled) then you might suggest that wolves never attack human beings; and behold the fires of debate are rekindled. The only scene in a novel read many years ago that I remember vividly was the eating of a man by a pack of wolves. The novel was by the once-famous Hungarian writer, Maurus Jokai (1825-1904); it was called "Eyes Like the Sea." The heroine had green eyes, I think; though I will not bet on it; they may have been blue. But what I remember is that two men climbed a tree to avoid a pack of wolves, and the animals kept leaping up, in a vain endeavor to reach the men. One of the two unfortunately shouted and laughed at the wolves in derision; when suddenly they rushed at the tree in three-storied formation, one on the back of another and a third on his back; by a supreme effort, they caught the man's foot, dragged him down and in less than a few seconds had eaten everything except his boots. It was a most unpleasant experience not only for him but for his comrade. Well, did such a thing happen outside of novels?

Now as to whether sharks attack healthy men or not, there is an immense divergence of opinion. The late Louis Becke, who loved to make his readers suffer, in one of his novels described men and women in a rowboat; the sharks came up, bit off the blades of the oars, the boats broached to, and the sharks devoured the passengers.

Some years ago that Polyanna newspaper man, Ed Howe, said that the only individual or thing that an editor could safely attack, was the man-eating shark. But is there such a fish?

Well, to those who are interested in these submarine pirates, I recommend a grisly but exciting book recently (1933) published, called "Shark! Shark!" It is by Capt. William E. Young, is copiously illustrated with horrid pictures, and records the adventures of a man who has spent 30 years hunting sharks.

One of the interesting things he says about sharks is that they never sleep. They are too hungry to take any repose. They can not therefore be psycho-analyzed. Incidentally, we can not now say what we used to say of bad persons, that they are good only while they sleep.

This book is bound in shark leather.

Congressional Leaders Plan to Speed Pace Until Adjournment.

(Associated Press.)

Administration leaders whipped up their forces last night to put Congress over the half dozen or so high hurdles that intervene between now and an adjournment in early June.

The Senate will try to take the first of them today with leaders hopeful of passing the Glass-Barkley bill to set up a half-billion dollar joint Government and private fund for loans to business.

Next will come the communications control measure. Senate leaders plan to begin work on it by mid-week, bringing to the floor a measure subjected to long and controversial hearings at both ends of the Capitol.

The tariff issue also will confront the Senate before adjournment. This time, instead of involving horizontal raising or lowering of trade barriers, the tariff proposal embodies the Roosevelt-proposed plan of separate trade treaties with foreign nations, the treaties to be negotiated and consummated by the President without approval of the Senate. The House already has approved the plan.

Mr. Roosevelt also is expected to send to Capitol Hill his recommendation for the housing program, a plan involving Government encouragement of a big-scale new home and repair program.

Another item of a "must" nature, because of the character of existing temporary legislation, is the bank deposit guarantee bill. Unless Congress acts before July 1, the bank guarantee law becomes permanent and the Administration wants the temporary plan extended for another year.

While optimistic members of the Democratic leadership talk of winding up the session between May 26 and June 2, others of the high command guess at June 9.

Presbyterians Debate Joining Church Council

Atlanta, Ga., May 13 (AP).—Reentry of the Southern Presbyterian Church into the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, from which it withdrew two years ago, will be a major question before the annual session of the denomination's general assembly at Montreat, N. C., May 24-31, a church committee report disclosed today.

The Southern Presbyterian Church in withdrawing from the council, announced that it did so in the belief the interdenominational organization was too active in public affairs and social matters.

No End of Books

Theodore Hall

IN the rush of overtime night work, the lights go out in a lumber products factory. The men at the machines turn off their dead switches in the dark. They hoot and cat-call. Little by little they grow exasperated, and come out from behind their protective shells. The darkness loosens them, leads them to expose the pressure and strain under which they work. The scene, the men, and the hates and fears inside them are illuminated by the blackness itself.

By such a soundly dramatic device, Robert Cantwell opens his second novel, "The Land of Plenty" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50). His first, "Laugh and Lie Down," placed him at one step among the leading writers of proletarian literature. I find it hard to believe the book in hand does not find him at the peak of the van. For he makes the workers, not walking Marxist tracts, but round and solid human beings. He puts them in an environment which is made grim by its unrolling effects, not by an author's easy say so. He does no preaching from the sidelines—the characters act out the story, and the sole comment lies in the ironic title.

THEO. HALL.

* * * *

The motto he places at the front of the book sets a new style. Where once the literary man chose an orotund passage from Plato or Sir Thomas Browne, Mr. Cantwell leads off with a quotation from the "Census of Manufacturers" (Though how a Government bulletin in 1931, as my text reads, could report statistics for 1933 in the past tense is more than I see—but let that pass.) I quote in part from this motto: "The Bureau of the Census announces that . . . the value of the output of timber products and lumber in the United States in 1933 . . . amounted to $441,587,205, a decrease of 65.2 per cent as compared with $1,267,373,693 reported for 1929 . . ." In such cool terms lies the gist and moving force of this moiling, passionate, troubled novel.

For from the incident of the lights going out, there is a steady rising of temperature. Clashes of one harassed worker with another, growing labor troubles for the bosses, growing distress and deprivation for the workers—all lead to the final mob violence between laborers, scabs and police.

But in the meantime we have watched the characters one by one—Carl, the young foreman and efficiency engineer; Walt, the college boy, lonely and desperate; the two "Polack" sisters; McMahon, the superintendent, a drunkard quarreling with his wife; his daughter Rose; and all the varied workers in the mill. Where once they were units in a production chart—and if there is one thing this novel shows it is the fearful presence of a constant "cracking down," from the Eastern owners down the line to the humblest floor-sweeper—they are now all human beings. A reduction of 65.2 per cent in timber products spreads a long way in human terms. From that truism, clearly seen and made the most of, rises the power of this novel.

I could make only one wish that Mr. Cantwell's style might have avoided its breathless repetition of phrases and dialogue. Saying a thing four times does not make it art. But beyond that, Mr. Cantwell may be proud of many attainments—not the least of which is the fact that he dropped the second-novel jinx entirely out the window.

What its 1849 readers knew as "The Personal History, Experience, and Observation of David Copperfield the Younger, of Blunderstone Rookery, Which He Never Meant to Be Published on Any Account," is still a very favorite book.

Of all his works Dickens liked it the best. He once wrote: "It will be easily believed that I am a fond parent to every child of my fancy, and that no one can ever love that family as dearly as I love them. But, like many fond parents, I have in my heart of hearts a favorite child. And his name is David Copperfield."

This seems to be a Dickens spring. The Modern Library has just brought out "Copperfield" ($0.95) as its book of the month. It makes a stout and attractive little volume 923 pages, illustrated with 39 drawings by "Phiz" (Hablot K. Browne) which appeared in the original edition.

I think it would be worth an attack of amnesia to come again to the first fresh acquaintance with Mr. Peggoty, Mr. Micawber and "Barkis's willin'."

European Training Has Developed Natural Vocal Talents.

Mrs. Anne Archbold Will Be Host to Select Group.

In ages long gone by, when this fairly well civilized country was little more than an unexplored playground for Indians and deer, a large nation on the other side of the Pacific was treating with nonchalance the existence of libraries, factories and any number of unexpected things. Although China has now been overtaken in many ways by this country in her rapid stride, she still retains her high seat in the world of art. There is something undescribably beautiful and elusive about Oriental art, and in many American homes, dainty etchings and embroideries are given the places of honor on the panels and tables.

It is without a bit of astonishment that one learns of the growing popularity of still another art in China's collection. It is that of music.

There is visiting in Washington now a young gentleman, Mr. Chao Mei Pa, who spent his childhood and early years in Shanghai. He attended the university there, going from the undergradute classes on through the four academic years.

He had always been a rather jolly person, bursting forth into bits of song at frequent intervals. His voice, strong and clear, attracted considerable attention and so friends and relatives decided that he should be sent to Belgium to study at the Conservatoire Royal d Musique in Brussels.

In Belgium, Chao Mei Pa's songs, with their simplicity and all the charms of the old Pentaphomies, were received with enthusiasm. In London and Paris it was the same. He was a hit. He sings equally well in any tongue, seeming to understand and really enjoy each song and possessing a remarkable knowledge of Western music.

Now, after his years of studying in Europe, he is returning to his own country. He will remain in Washington this week as the guest of the Minister of China and Mme. Sze, at the Legation.

Saturday afternoon he will give a few selections at the tea to be given by Mrs. Anne Archbold in her home, then members of Washington society will have the opportunity of hearing and seeing this young artist who is capable of interesting them as much as most of the artists of old Europe and who has the added touch of something new and different.

Mrs. Tazewell Taylor, of Norfolk, Va., with Mrs. Walter C. Maher and the latter's daughter, of Virginia Beach, Va., are returning to their respective homes today after spending the past week-end at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Children's Theater Group May 26 to Witness "Treasure Island."

Juvenile matinee parties will be held at the National Theater, Saturday morning, May 26, when, under the auspices of the Women's International League, the young subscribers to the Children's Theater will witness a performance of Robert Louis Stevenson's thrilling tale of pirates and buccaneers, "Treasure Island," by Washington's Community Players.

The players were organized by Bess Schreiner to present "Alice in Wonderland" last summer at the National Sylvan Theater.

With Mrs. Roosevelt as one of its important patronesses, the Children's Theater has been presenting a succession of fine performances brought from New York City by Mrs. Clare Tree Major throughout the past two seasons.

Plans are being completed by the Women's International League through Miss Matilda Young and Miss Mabel Vernon to bring this same talented group of New York Children's Theater Players here again next season. The Community Players' production of "Treasure Island" will be offered as an extra attraction for boys and girls and their parents. Through this performance it is hoped to pay off a small deficit in the Children's Theater fund incurred this season.

Among prominent Washington patronesses of the Children's Theater are Mrs. William Howard Taft, Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, Mrs. Harold Ickes, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Mme. Paul May, Mrs. Burton K. Corrin Strong, Mrs. John T. Vance, jr., Mrs. Robert C. Watson, and Mrs. Lester Wilson.

Choral Society Festival Is Set for Thursday

Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe's Works to Be Features of Program.

With a distinguished list of sponsors headed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge herself, and with "first public performance" attached to several of its announced program numbers, the Washington Choral Society, of which Mr. Myron W. Whitney is president, will present its annual festival concert Thursday at 8:15 p. m. in Central High School Auditorium.

The two-hundredth anniversary of the composition of "The Four Seasons" by J. S. Bach, which had its Washington premiere by this choral group last May, and the first performance in the Capital City of America's popular composer's musical setting of Oliver Wendell Holmes' famous poem of "The Chambered Nautilus," may account for some of the interest in the approaching concert, but the feature will be the performance of choral works by Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, known musically and familiarly as "Mary Howe."

Two of Mrs. Howe's compositions to be heard on Thursday night are new to Washingtonians: "Catalina" and Shelley's "Music When Soft Voices Die." These will be offered by the "madrigal group," headed by Miss Helen Howison. The group includes Miss Mildred Colvin, Miss Vera Neely Ross, Miss Bertha Morgan, Mr. George Myers, Mr. H. I. Maycock, Mr. Edwin Steffe and Mr. Aubrey Goodrich.

Mrs. Howe's famous "Chain Gang Song" will likewise be featured on the festival program, and will be sung by the ensemble of voices, assisted by the chamber orchestra of the National Symphony, using the special instrument imported by Mrs. Howe from North Carolina to make the noise of the chains. Mrs. Howe was inspired to compose this piece by hearing a section of the chain gang in North Carolina singing as they worked along the roadside.

Grey or Beige Footwear Worn Now for Street

If You're Looking for Something Like This, Here's Interesting Sale.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

SHOPPERS WHO aren't buying white shoes now probably have their weather eye open for some gray or beige ones. A large percentage of these shoppers do not want cheap ones—they feel too friendly toward their feet for that. But at the same time, they'd just as soon pay as little as possible.

To suit their wants and purses an F street shop is selling out 365 pairs of gray and beige shoes. Only a short time ago they were priced at $5 and $8.50. Now they are down to $3.65 and $4.90.

The manaager of the shop in a short and friendly chat said it was their objective to furnish a high quality shoe for a medium price, and added there was no necessity for comfortable and healthful shoes to be expensive luxuries. He is sticking to it they aren't.

Next to Nothing.

"Briefs" are all their name implies. They are panties, in combination crepe and net, or else all lace. And do they fit! At least, what there is of them, does.

The clinging silk frocks of summer should fit smoothly and without bulges and wrinkles from loose lingerie. No better way to guard against such ridges than by having a "brief" for every occasion.

Just as summer underthings should be, these are cool as they look—and that's saying something! Furthermore, it only takes a few seconds to launder them, and only a few more for them to dry.

• • • •

Inexpensive Miscellani.

A closeout of odds and ends in the basement of a downtown store disclosed an assortment of things with story-book prices.

Mixing bowls that look strangely forlorn and batterless are there in several sizes trying their best to go for 25 or 29 cents. They sold some time ago for considerably more.

Kitchen carving knives and forks with sturdy wooden handles, stainless steel blades and prongs are 15 cents apiece. Grapefruit knives with serrated edges sell for the same amount.

• • • •

And Across The Street.

There's a tempting sale across the street at another shop. Here they have bath powder—large boxes of it—that sold once for $2. It's now 49 cents.

Small bottles of $2 perfume are priced at 59 cents! But the most drastic values of all, are the $6 bottles going for $1.69.

Customers have a choice of many fragrances, lilac, carnation, violet, chypre, gardenia, jasmine, and many others.

• • • •

Pitter Patter.

When a sudden shower tumbles from a grey-coated sky, shoppers hurry and scurry to purchase umbrellas and rain capes. They buy in haste and repent when the bill comes in.

If they would consider many months of frequent rains are in store they would plan ahead, and do a little selecting at the rain-cape counter of a downtown department store. There are some intriguing values here.

Capes, light enough to carry comfortably over the arm and long and wide enough to cover a street frock, come in numerous designs. There are plain ones, 42 inches in length, all different colors, for 85 cents. Forty-four inch ones are $1.25. Forty-two inch pin checked capes in summer shades are $1.

Two of the best sellers are a neutral tan, and a solid white.

• • • •

Like Rainbows.

Pastel pearls, resembling crystallized rainbows are the new summer jewelry offering in a Washington gift shop. They've just come in—but they'll soon be gone. It's that way in this shop. Never an hour of the day that at least three customers aren't there before you. Consequently, there is a standing reorder on most of the merchandise. So if the pearls are gone before you see them, take heart—there will be others.

They come in 16-inch strings, and in triple string bracelets.

• • • •

Home Dryer.

A certain small electrical instrument hath charms that soothe the head of hair. It's a hair dryer that can be plugged in a socket. You simply hold it in one hand, direct it at the head, and it pours forth a stream of warm air. Which is better, some people think, than sitting for hours under a stationary dryer. And by the way—it's only $1.69.

Eyes on It.

Women who have had their eye on one silver and glass hors d'oeuvre dish will be glad to hear it is marked down to a reasonable sum.

Women who haven't had their eye on it, but are likely to now, may recognize it by the partitioned glass plate that fits into a silver plated tray. When the dish is removed, the tray may be used for sandwiches, cocktails or whatever the occasion calls for.

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Jerome Bonaparte—Elizabeth Patterson

THOUGH BORN with the Atlantic between them, they met in the flush of their youth in old Baltimore. He came equipped with all the elegance of the French court, as the brother of the great Bonaparte, and swept the lovely Betsy Patterson off into a whirlwind marriage. But this wedding of a commoner drew down the imperial wrath on the prince's head. An annulment was accomplished and the prince left his beautiful bride, to see her only once more in their lives.

A Belle of Old Baltimore Captured the Heart of Napoleon's Brother.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

INTERNATIONAL romances have become a commonplace in the last 50 years, but in the days of Prince Jerome Bonaparte and charming "Betsy" Patterson, of Baltimore, they were a novelty indeed.

Elizabeth or "Betsy" Paterson was one American girl who dreamed of a Prince Charming and found him.

Fate in the person of Napoleon Bonaparte intervened and separated the lovers after they were married. But Mme. Bonaparte who lived to be an old lady could echo feelingly those immortal lines of Tennyson's "In Memoriam:"

"I hold it true, what e'er befall;
I feel it when I sorrow most;
'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all."

The bevy of Baltimore belles who welcomed Napoleon's younger brother all were alert for his smiles but it was "Betsy" Patterson who won serious attentions from the dashing young suitor from over the seas surrounded by the glamour reflected from the fame of the great Napoleon.

The whole town turned out to witness the passage of Jerome and his entourage to call upon his fair charmer. It was a sight to behold. In winter he drove in state in a French sleigh, shaped like a lion with a splendidly carved and colored gilded head, with flashing eyes of glass, red tongue lolling from the mouth and flowing, tawny mane. Horses were harnessed in tandem fashion.

This parade of French elegance would arrive at the Patterson home where William Patterson, one of the first citizens of Baltimore, had established a mansion, one of the show places of the city. It was not long before Jerome felt Elizabeth Patterson combined "all the qualities which he could desire" and, in addition "was the most beautiful woman in the world." It is said that even before he had met her he had given her the title of "ma belle femme."

Jerome was the sailor among the Bonapartes. He came to America in 1803 while on a voyage around the world. In September of that year at the races to which social Baltimore flocked, Jerome and Elizabeth Patterson met for the first time.

Elizabeth had been well educated, spoke French fluently, sang and played prettily and was past mistress in the art of coquetry. The day they met she is described as having been dressed in a buff colored silk dress, a hat with long ostrich plumes which set off to advantage her Grecian features, large dark eyes, a dainty mouth and chin, with an exquisite complexion to cap off the whole.

Elizabeth Patterson was accustomed to the attentions of the beaux of Baltimore. She was rather haughty at first to the prince. After all, the Bonapartes were parvenus in the courts of Europe. But his dashing grace and charm won her heart quite apart from his high rank. It was Jerome the man rather than Jerome the prince who held her girlish fancy.

But this time it was real love with Jerome. The prince went to Washington, put the story of his love before Thomas Jefferson and asked him to use his good offices with his imperial brother. Jefferson sympathized with the young lovers but, of course, could take no official steps in their behalf. The French Minister reminded the prince of the obstacles of the French laws. But Jerome laughed at them all.

On Christmas Eve.

It was on Christmas eve, 1803, that Prince Jerome and Elizabeth Patterson were united by the solemn marriage rites of the Roman Catholic Church performed by the Right Rev. John Carroll, Bishop of Baltimore and primate of all America.

What a picture of youth, grace and romance the contracting parties must have made. He in a bridal costume that Mme. Bonaparte preserved to her dying day, a purple coat of satin, skirt lined with white satin, reaching to his heels, gleaming knee buckles and diamond buckles on his shoes. And Betsy Patterson! How lovely was she in her embroidered French robe so gossamer-like and exquisitely fine that a wedding guest declared he could have put it in his coat pocket.

John Comegys was "right hand man," or what would be called "best man" in these days. The honeymoon journey was made by coach to Washington. The horses ran away and the bride was pitched out into a snowdrift, unharmed. The happy pair laughed merrily and kept on their way.

While the honeymooners lingered in Baltimore and Washington word of what had happened sped over seas to the first consul. He fumed and fretted and cut off the source of supplies, ordering Jerome to return at once to France and leave his bride behind him. Jerome laughed again. Would not his brother succumb as soon as he saw his bride? In the last event, Jerome could become an American citizen and keep the ocean between him and his irate brother.

But on May 18, 1804, Napoleon was proclaimed emperor and it was all the more imperative that Jerome be separated from his American wife. They set off for Paris, and got as far as Lisbon after shipwrecks and other perils. Word came there that the emperor was obdurate and it was thought best that Jerome should face his wrath alone. So they parted with tears and kisses and fond embraces, presumably for just a little while. It proved to be forever.

The Kind Emperor.

Jerome told a friend: "The emperor is kind—he is just. Even admitting that I had committed a fault in marrying Miss Patterson without his consent, is this the moment for inflicting punishment?

But in twelve days the struggle was over. Jerome had sacrificed his love for the glittering distant glory of a crown.

England gave refuge to Mme. Bonaparte and the tiny son who was born on July 7, 1805.

Letters came from Jerome protesting undying devotion but he obeyed his brother and kept away from the young mother. Then Napoleon demanded the marriage be annulled. To the eternal honor of the then Pope, his holiness refused the annulment. A bishop was found who was more complaisant and while Elizabeth Bonaparte waited for her husband's return, their marriage was annulled and plans were made for Jerome's marriage to Prince Frederica Catherine of Wurttemberg. In December Jerome was crowned King of Westphalia. Then he demanded his young son.

With spirit Elizabeth refused and likewise the offer to become Princess of Schmalkalden and her son be made a prince. She wrote back: "Westphalia is not large enough for two queens, and as to the annuity, I prefer to be sheltered under the wing of an eagle rather than to be suspended from the bill of a goose." Napoleon was so delighted with her spirit he offered her 60,000 francs a year on condition that she relinquish the name of "Bonaparte." She replied she would never consent to barter a name which had been made so famous.

In 1813 in order to protect her son and his property rights in America, Mme. Bonaparte applied for a divorce in the courts of Maryland and won it, of course.

From the haven of Maryland, Mme. Bonaparte watched the upward flight and then the downfall of the Bonapartes. Before long she saw her recreant husband "a bankrupt king without a kingdom."

Mme. Bonaparte frequently visited Europe with her son. Then came a day in Florence when she came face to face with Jerome and his wife and daughter, Matilde. The former queen of Westphalia had grown fat and unshapely with the years, Elizabeth was still slender and lovely. She threw open her coat so Jerome could see how gently time had dealt with her figure and passed on without a word as his eyes fell to the ground in what we may hope was remorse at his treachery.

Elizabeth Patterson was more loyal to Napoleon than some of his relatives. When misfortune overtook him she upheld him valiantly. When her presence was requested at the court of Louis XVIII so the king might express personally his sympathy over her treatment at the hands of Napoleon, she retorted she did not consider herself the victim of imperial tyranny, although, she had been sacrificed to political considerations. Furthermore, she said, she had accepted the kindness of the emperor and ingratitude was not one of her vices. How Napoleon must have regretted his interference in his brother's romance with such a noble woman.

Honored and adored by her townspeople, Elizabeth Patterson lived out her days in Baltimore. Her story became a legend and her home was pointed out as sheltering one who should have been a queen but for the weak will of a man whom she had loved "not wisely but too well."

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Metabolism and Heart Disease.

Within recent years there have been many reports on lowering the metabolic rate as a means of treating certain kinds of heart disease. The types of heart disease referred to are those in which the heart muscle is finding difficulty in doing the work it is called on to do; the cases in which compensation is broken or a break is threatened.

Methods of treatment used in the past belong in three classes:

First lessening the original cause. Since this is often a scarring of a valve due to a long antecedent case of rheumatism, sore throat, St. Vitus dance, or other infection, the harm can not be remedied or even lessened.

The second was to stimulate the heart muscle to do more work. For this purpose exercise and work are prescribed in set amounts and of designated kinds; drugs, usually of the digitalis group, are used; and good food and good air are employed to build up good muscle by means of good nutrition.

The third consists of measures to lessen the work that the heart has to do. These have consisted of prescribed rest, such as refraining from work and exercise—inaction such as rest in bed, rest in a chair, spending the cold season in warm climates and at low altitudes, wearing warm clothing, and procedures of those types.

The more recently reported on procedures belong in this third group. The proposal is to lessen the amount of work the heart muscle is loaded with by lowering the metabolism of the tissues and thus decreasing their need for blood.

Spaghetti Isn't the Only Italian Dish That's Delicious; Here Are Some Others That Are Particularly Tasty for Informal Sunday Suppers.

By Susan Mills.

THERE'S NOTHING that fills the informal supper bill like spaghetti. If you make the sauces yourself and catch the delicious flavor of the Italian cuisine, you will have a reputation for being a delightful cook. Your friends will want to "come over for supper again."

But there are other Italian recipes equally delicious. Here are a few:

Minestrone.

½ pound salt pork
2 quarts water
1 clove garlic
2 carrots, sliced
1 cup dried beans, soaked
1-3 cup chopped celery
Any left-over vegetables
1 tablespoon fat
¼ cup pasta or rice, as preferred
1 teaspoon salt
¼ medium cabbage, shredded

Boil pork and water for one hour. Grind the pork with the garlic and parsley. Add all other ingredients except the cabbage. Simmer for two hours and then add cabbage. Cook 10 minutes longer. Sprinkle with grated cheese if desired and serve with Italian bread.

Bolognese Sauce.

This is good with macaroni, other pasta, or polenta:

¼ pound round steak, ground
2 ounces salt pork
1 carrot, chopped
2 tablespoons chopped onion
¼ cup chopped celery
1 tablespoon fat
2 tablespoons flour
2 cups broth or water
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

Brown the meat and vegetables in the fat. Add the flour and the broth or water and simmer one-half hour. Pour on cooked macaroni, other pasta, or polenta. Serve at once. This quantity of sauce will be enough for 4 cups of cooked pasta (8 ounces uncooked), or polenta made from 1 cup uncooked corn meal. This sauce may also be served over rice or potatoes.

What Today Means

"Taurus."

If May 14 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. until noon, from 3:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 12:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m.

If you have started the day with a vague feeling of dissatisfaction, throw your chest out, pull your shoulders back and vigorously inhale three or four times—copious, lung-filling gobs of fresh air—and the world will seem much brighter. You may be disappointed in not receiving a reply regarding a matter in which you are interested. Do not be discouraged, for it is only a question of the decision being delayed. You will start attending to some matter entirely new on this date in either a social or business way, which will terminate succesfully, and earn you praise.

If a woman, and born on May 14, you love outdoor life, and eventually will find a great deal of peace and happiness in the country. Flowers will play a very important part in helping you to make a decision, after their soothing effect has caused cool deliberation. It may be surprising to discover how tranquilizing flowers will prove if a few are kept in your room. Possessing an excellent eye for color and having unusually good taste, the millinery and interior decorating businesses offer opportunities for your skill.

May 14 will prove a very busy but lucrative day for people of the "go-getter" type. This will prove an excellent day for the formulation of new ideas and for planning business activities.

I WAS A SPY!

By MARTHE McKENNA

Bowling along the road toward Westroosebeke with the lorry full of wounded half an hour later, the kiss of the warm sun stirred my spirits. I looked at the blue sky, wondering, in an impersonal way, if this was the last time I should see it. In the background hovered that vague feeling of fear as experienced by someone who is on his way to hospital to undergo a dangerous but inevitable operation. We caught up with the long marching column from Roulers, and as we rumbled past I wondered how many of those men, marching with careles hearts behind the blaring bands, were marching to their death.

There was practically nothing left of Westroosebeke, which I had not seen since that morning I had left it with the other women early in 1915, nothing but low walls and piles of broken bricks and fragments. Already large numbers of troops were waiting formed in close ranks on the outskirts of the village. As the lorry slowed down I could not help thinking of the felon arriving at the place of execution, try as I would. How I hoped that the "Seven Sisters" would not come! And yet, strangely enough, how I wanted them to come!

Ears Strained for Planes.

In every direction the whole countryside was dotted with little hastening groups in twos and threes anxious to put the danger zone behind them. The "Seven Sisters" were zooming overhead in great sweeping circles, every now and then diving with savage burst of machine-gun fire to encourage the unfortunates below to fresh efforts to escape. It made me think of a day when I had watched police dispersing industrial strikers. They must have had a good laugh, those airmen.

The "Seven Sisters" soon grew tired of harassing the fugitives, who were becomnig more and more widely scattered, and I think also this sort of slaughter appeared too "easy money" to be greatly to their liking. They could certainly feel content with the damage they had done. At a signal from their leader they swerved into formation and sailed away out of sight.

Crossing the Place on my way home about 8 o'clock the next morning, I noticed "Silent Willy" slouching across to his billet on the opposite side with a pannikin of tea. I was glad he was alive, and that made me think of Fashugel. I went upstairs to my room, and noticed with more than gladness that the door of Fashugel's room stood a quarter open and that there was movement inside. A little later, after washing and tidying myself, I went down to see what food we had in the house. When I was half-way down the stairs, I heard a dull thud of some heavy body on the landing, and glancing up saw that Fashugel's batman had just thrown out a large canvas kit-bag through the door of his room. Then the man himself came out carrying a suitcase. I caught my breath.

"Is the Herr Hauptmann going away?" I put tremulously.

"He's gone, Fraulein," he muttered grimly.

"What do you mean?"

"All we could find of the Herr Hauptmann yesterday morning was a split field boot with a spur on it. I'm taking his gear along to Brigade now so that it can be sent home to his mother. It's a pity, for we'll not get another company commander like him if this cursed war lasts till the crack of doom—yes, a bloody fine officer was our Fashugel, and the fellows will miss him!"

Toward the autumn, the German general staff issued orders which had their repercussion behind the lines. One day Alphonse came into my ward and made a signal that he wished to speak to me outside. In the corridor he handed me a buff form, a requisition for medical supplies, and whispered hurriedly:

"This has come from the aerodrome hospital section. You have been waiting to get inside the Rumbeke Aerdrome for a long time. Here is your chance. All these articles requisitioned are small and can be carried in one case. You can call there and leave them with Feldwebel Schweitzer on your way home."

"And here is something special for you," Alphonse went on. "In the canteen they are talking of the recent successful bombing of London. Mathy, the Zeppelin commander, is being made a hero. They say he is to lead a colossal raid very soon which will cripple the English and create terror and consternation throughout the country."

Some hope lay in Feldwebel Schweitzer. He used to make boisterous love to me in odd corners, seeming childishly pained and surprised at the cold reception he had received.

Feldwebel Schweitzer lay snoring in his bunk. At my knock he roused.

"What the hell——?" he growled. "Didn't I give orders that I wasn't to be disturbed—ah. Fraulein—wie reizend.—Thank God for a pretty face! You have brought the medical stores. I thank you, meine fraulein."

Pokes Head Around Corner.

After poking his head around the corner, he shut the door and offered me a cigarette.

"Who is this Mathy from whom you expect such great things?" I put innocently.

"You ought to have read the accounts in the German papers of his last few raids. I bet there are quite a lot of people over in England saying their prayers of a night in these days." He chuckled hoarsely.

"Take it from me," he grinned, "there is going to be no mistake this time. Word has come through from the higher command. On October 1—you will see!" He wagged his close-cropped head mysteriously. "It will be the most colossal raid of the war, and London will go—pouff." He threw up his hands in a dramatic gesture. "It is said Mathy is to lead 11 Zeppelins," he continued. "Two go from Bruges, the rest from the fatherland. By Christmas we shall be home, nein?"

Suddenly his long arms were around me, his lips slobbering over my face. I tried to wrench myself away, but he had a hug like a bear. For what seemed hours I struggled. Beads of sweat came out on Schweitzer's red face and he panted like an animal. Suddenly he hurled me backward so that my knees caught the edge of the stretcher, and gave a grunt of triumph. I screamed, hardly hoping that anyone would hear, for the medical hut was isolated some little distance from the rest of the buildings, but suddenly the door opened. Over the German's shoulder I saw an officer looking down at us.

"What's all this—what the blasted hell is going on here, Schweitzer?" he shouted in a thunderous voice. Schweitzer jumped as if shot, and stood regarding the officer in a hang-dog way.

"Stand to attention when I speak to you, d'you hear? What are you doing with this woman? Why is there nobody on duty? Great God, you, fraulein!" Questions and fury gushed from him, while Schweitzer stood like a ramrod. He was the duty officer of the day at the aerodrome; he was one of their crack pilots with a reputation. He had been badly wounded in an air combat, and had been in the hospital for a month for treatment, where we had become good friends. I explained to him my reason for being at the aerodrome.

"Follow me, please," and he closed the door behind us, leaving Feldwebel Schweitzer to his thoughts.

"Fraulein," he ventured, "I have not seen you for a long time now. Do me an honor this evening if you are feeling in a gracious mood. Come and dine with me. I am on duty, as you see, so tonight I am destined to dine here at the Aerodrome in the duty officer's hut in solitary state; at least I was so destined until I met you." He turned and caught my hands. "You will be kind—eh, meine Fraulein?"

"Very well, Herr Lieutenant," I smiled, 'I will dine with you, but I shall not stay late afterwards."

Suddenly my eye caught five planes drawn up on the edge of the landing ground, and close by a new wooden hangar was in the course of building. These were single-seater biplanes with little fair round bodies suggestive of speed, of a type I had not seen before.

"I see you are overflowing here, Herr Lieutenant," I said lightly, beckoning towards the row of biplanes.

"Ah, the little Albatrosses, Fraulein—yes, we have not had time to house them yet. They suddenly appeared out of the sky on the evening of the day before yesterday without any previous warning. They are straight from the factory and we are the first to get them. The Kommandant handed them over to my flight for service testing out.

"Well, Fraulein," he encouraged, throwing open the door of the duty officer's hut. "I can't offer you a first-class dinner, I'm afraid, but it's as good as you would find at home I expect in these hard times—and there's plenty to drink at any rate." Selecting a bottle from the little group which clustered on the central table, he poured two kummels.

By the time the batman made his appearance with plates, knives and forks, I knew how many planes there were in the Aerodrome, their capabilities and much other useful information besides.

The airman rose. "Fraulein," he said, "will you excuse me for a moment. I have to finish my report on the Albatross this evening, for the Kommandant will want to see it tomorrow morning. It is only a matter of five minutes." He set to work at a table in the corner fitted up as a writing-table. Nearby was his application for a long overdue leave.

I was thinking idly to myself that if only I could get hold of his aeroplane report it would be of great interest to those over the frontier, but came to the conclusion that I had better be content with what I had learned already.

"If you remember, Fraulein, please remind me to tell my batman to put those two envelopes in the orderly room post-box," he said as he helped me to the stew. He had folded up the aeroplane report and also his leave application and placed each in a separate official envelope.

He had not licked and stuck down the sticky address label on either of the envelopes, presumably leaving that faintly unpleasing task for his faithful batman, and as we ate an idea occurred to me. The envelope in which he had put his leave application must be addressed to the Brigade Major at H. Q., and the one holding the aeroplane report would be addressed to his Kommandant at the Aerodrome orderly room. The two envelopes were still open. Supposing that I could change over the contents, so that the aeroplane report went to Brigade and vice versa, I believed I might be able to procure a copy of the aeroplane report down to the last detail.

Fortunately my friend helped me himself in this matter. When we had finished eating he discovered that his batman had forgotten to bring across his brandy with his drinks from his billet which was not far distant, and he rushed to the door and angrily throwing it open, stood outside and started to roar for him lustily. And here the good batman helped me also, for he was chatting with the men in the guard-room some distance away and did not hear his master for some time. I made the change like lightning, though my fingers seemed to fumble maddeningly, and I was terified that he might turn to speak to me through the door. When he returned grumbling at his batman, I was back in my place. A few minutes later, at his master's order (I had to remind him), the batman had stuck up the envelopes and removed them.

Only Once.

By Katherine Smith.

My love loved me, but I was cold.
My heart had whispered, "I believe
That other loves will come." I told
My only love to take his leave.
Thought not without impunity
I must have reasoned like a dunce
True love, like opportunity,
Puts in appearance only once.

8 Foundlings Per Year Abandoned To Mercy of Washington Weather

There Are Four Women Here Whose Business It Is to Avert Tragedies of Babies' Deaths; Their Chief Difficulty Lies in Convincing Mothers They Want to Help.

Fear of public scorn on the part of unwed mothers reaps too high a toll of babies' lives, declare social workers. This city has an average of eight "doorstep babies" a year. Two died last winter as the result of exposure.

Modern society stands ready to help rather than to brand the woman whose child is born out of wedlock. In Washington there are at least four understanding women to whom she may turn. Through any of the agencies they represent her baby may be given a chance.

TODAY READERS TURN THE PAGES of "The Scarlet Letter," smugly thankful they were born outside an age when an erring woman was branded for life. Today audiences see modern presentations of "East Lynne," and smile pityingly at the intolerance of the past.

And yet—even today—babies are left on doorsteps. Eight a year is the average for Washington.

The mental hangover concerning what was once the unpardonable sin dies hard. Social workers find it difficult to get across the idea that modern society stands ready to help rather than to hound the mother with an unwanted child.

Because unmarried mothers are ignorant of the enlightened and helpful attitude the world of today takes toward them, babies pay the penalty—often with death, social workers pointed out. Relief agencies are at a disadvantage in caring for the abandoned baby in event it survives its first neglect and exposure. Often the child will die of malnutrition before the doctor can find the proper food. This problem would be alleviated if the mother could be reached.

"If I had only known there was some other way out," say again and again girls who in the temporary insanity of despair have abandoned their babies and later sought to claim them. Often they have returned too late.

At least four understanding women stand ready in Washington to help the mother who does not know what to do with her child. They are Miss Louise O. Beall, Associated Charities, Eleventh and M streets; Miss A. Patricia Morse, Division of Public Welfare, District Building; Miss Mildred Terrett, Juvenile Protective Association, 1212 Eleventh street; Capt. Rhoda Milliken, head of the Woman's Bureau, 1224 Fifth street northwest.

"The family tie is something every human being in the world is entitled to," said Miss Beall. "Therefore when an unmarried mother and her child come under our care we see the problem as a family one. We try to find the baby's father, if the mother is willing, and try to enlist the interest of the mother's relatives if she is estranged from them.

Why Do They Do It.

"However, we never violate a mother's confidence. If she is absolutely opposed to turning to the child's father or to relatives, we work out another solution for her, probably a boarding home for the baby while she seeks employment."

Pointing out the average of eight abandoned babies a year was too high for Washington, Miss Morss declared it was strange mothers would leave their babies to suffer hunger, exposure and possibly death when so many helping hands were extended.

She said the District expended about $300 a year for each baby left in its care and it had been known to care for a child three years without depriving the mother of her claim.

"Mothers about to desert their babies should know of the money the District spends for cod liver oil for undernourished children," said Miss Morss. "Why we even buy especially constructed shoes for our little wards if the examining doctors think it necessary."

They Sympathize.

"With a helping hand always ready for her, it is strange indeed that a mother would leave her baby to suffer hunger and exposure and will place herself in the position of possibly being haunted for life over her child's uncertain fate."

In her position with the welfare division Miss Morss is foster mother to the 1,800 child wards of the District. These include babies, children and adolescents. Many of the babies have come into the District's care from mothers who were unable to acknowledge their children publicly or to care for them financially. Often the District helps the mother a few months or even a year and she is then able to take the care of her child. If she is unable to take back her child plans are made for its permanent adoption. There is never any difficulty in finding good foster homes for children. The number of applications for desirable babies for adoption far exceeds the supply.

Miss Terrett, in her cheery office of the Juvenile Protective Association, offers sympathetic understanding to the mother with unwanted baby.

"The world is becoming more tolerant in regard to the status of the illegitimate child," she said, "but it is surprising how much of the East Lynne attitude still exists."

Miss Terrett and other social workers pointed out that few if any of the mothers abandoning babies were heartless, that the fear of disgrace rivaled so strongly their maternal instincts that in desperate cases the fear triumphed. Financial inability to care for a child also was a factor in desertion cases, they said.

Social workers have found, however, that mothers are usually only temporarily swayed by these emotions. Later they regret their impulsive acts and suffer for what they have done. More general knowledge that social agencies were prepared to care for their babies and would keep all information confidential would eliminate such motives for baby desertion.

New Deal for Babies.

Capt. Milliken, who deals with many baby-and-mother problems, directs the girl in need of assistance to the proper agency. But she also gives personal understanding and sympathy to the case. She, in common with other social workers here, is interested in seeing another year will not have a repetition of last winter's tragedy—two abandoned babies dying from exposure and being buried in a potter's field. She believes knowledge that the modern world is a good Samaritan rather than stern-visaged Puritan will bring about a better deal for the abandoned baby.

This Woman's Beauty-Hunting Days Are Over

She Indulged in All the Aids; the Effect Was Disenchanting.

By Evelyn Voss Wise.

I CAN never attain that perfection of beauty which the ads claim may belong to anyone.

I had been reading the ads. For the first time in ten years I had such a thoroughly competent maid that I found leisure to read and digest the aids to beauty in a current magazine. There were lovely sentences, such as, "Take all your charm with you in swimming this summer" . . . "Little toes, what now? . . . "The Hush following your entrance to a room."

I started at the cosmetic counter. Night cream was what my skin needed, the lady told me, after peering at my face. She sold me a thick paste to be used once a week. I stopped at various other places, feeling quite light and bouyant, like a butterfly about to emerge from a cocoon.

As Directed.

At night I applied the paste as directed. The result was startling. Two eyes stared out of something resembling a plaster cast.

"Mother," my little boy gasped. "You look terrible."

Through tight lips—the paste would not give—I assured him I was merely taking care of my skin.

In the morning I was awakened early by a ring of the door bell. The postman handed me a letter, but his eyes were on my face. Before I had finished reading a colored boy came to the door.

I had forgotten my mask. It took almost an hour to remove that crust. I followed all the directions implicitly and when finished was too exhausted to appreciate "the natural glow" which I was given to expect.

For the next two days I plucked unruly brows, and spent feverish moments with an eyelash curler. I cold-creamed my knees and elbows and did all the little tricks guaranteed to make women alluring.

The Denouement.

The end came when I tried the girdle . . . a bitter but final denouement.

"It will stretch," the salesgirl had promised.

I pulled and jerked and yanked, and finally had the thing around me. I could hardly breathe and my face was purple. For one moment I gazed at myself before I was overcome by panic. How could I get out of it? That terrible feeling . . . like a dress caught over one's head . . . took possession of me. Again that frantic pulling and jerking began and only when it was down at my feet could I breathe. Slowly I raised myself, only to find that in the frenzy I had sprained both shoulders.

Now I am once more at peace. I shall not try to be subtle and distinctive and all those other words. I shall use my old jar of cold cream and go back to my writing.

In Grandmother's Dresses.

BECKY TARWATER showed a lot of ingenuity, talent and quaint costumes when she gave her program at the King-Smith Studios Friday night. Everybody knows how gifted both the Tarwater girls are. Their songs of the mountain folk and colored people of their native Tennessee are always in demand.

• • • •

But Becky did something quite different Friday. She gave a series of personality sketches called "The Wives of Henry Cates," and for them she used costumes for which she wrote back to Tennessee.

• • • •

Among them was an old silk and lace wrapper, as they called negligees in Becky's grandmother's time. And this was one of her grandmother's things, lovely in its soft tones of white. Then there was the graduation dress which Becky's aunt wore when she was a "sweet girl graduate."

A Stage-Struck Horse.

ALL THE roads from Washington seem to be leading toward horsey places — Warrenton, Louisville, Pimlico, Middleburg and Bradley Farms, out near the Congressional Club.

• • • •

Horses! Horses! Horses! Everywhere. And one of the most amusing of them all has been playing an important role at Ford's Theater in Baltimore in connection with Florence Reed's sparkling comedy, "Thoroughbred."

• • • •

Bad Girl is the name of this horse and Miss Reed says she has behaved beautifully. She was also in Miss Reed's previous production of the same play at the Auditorium several months ago when the setting used had a lower window-sill for Bad Girl to browse over as she waited for her mistress—of the play—to recognize her presence and offer her sugar.

• • • •

This low window-sill almost ruined one act. Bad Girl saw Miss Reed tuck the bag of sugar underneath a ruffle just inside. She stepped calmly over the low sill and, as the actors with their backs turned were going through a dramatic moment, they were startled by a roar of laughter sweeping over the audience. Miss Reed turned her head quickly, saw the cause and "ad-libbed" until she could get the horse into a less conspicuous position.

Social Programs Called 'Snooty'

Workers Can Handle Own Leisure Time, Declares Professor.

Philadelphia, May 13 (U.P.).—Working people don't welcome the condescension of social workers who want to make their spare time "profitable," according to Prof. Harry A. Overstreet, instructor at the College of the City of New York.

Prof. Overstreet denounced programs to guide people in the use of leisure time as "snooty."

"All this talk about leisure time and methods of helping working people to spend it profitably is a very high-hat kind of business, and decidedly snooty," he said in a talk here.

"Left to themselves, they are quite capable of spending their spare time as well as anyone else."

Naturally people don't want others to "teach" them how to have a good time, said Prof. Overstreet, and added he didn't blame them.

"It isn't much fun to be told how to enjoy yourself, especially by some one who looks and acts superior," he said. "Working people know how to have a good time, and they ask no advice from people who don't work."

Posies Bloom On Smartest Paris Frocks

Floral prints are everywhere. The Paris dressmakers seem unable to get enough of them to satisfy their desire for gay, picturesque clothes. New York designers and shops are sponsoring figured materials at a time when they usually settle down to plain, placid surfaces. And every Washington shop resembles a flower garden, so full is it of blooming dresses.

Just as fashionable as printed fabrics are embroidered ones. The embroidered figures are flowers—of course—and are invariably small. Clover blossoms, violets, buttercups or rosebuds in natural colors are scattered all over pastel organza. These materials are best for the very young. They are much too ingenuous for sophisticated women of fashion.

When the saturation point in floral prints has been reached, one may choose from flocks of checks, plaids and intriguing geometric designs woven into thin fabrics. Mousseline de soie covered with large yellow and gray squares is striking when whipped up into a long-lined dinner or cocktail dress. Frocks of this type may be found in Washington shops, along with bizarre, striped affairs bound to create a sensation wherever they go.

The grand thing about these prints, floral or otherwise, is that they go so beautifully with wagon-wheel hats. And the woman who doesn't have at least one huge hat this summer might just as well hibernate in her own room until the fall styles come in. The only fashion that equals the present big hat vogue is the rage for prints.

Benefit Concert To Take Place

First of the Georgetown Series Will Be Held in the Shouse Home.

THE Old Georgetown Candlelight Music Festival sponsors will present the first of three benefit concerts at 5 o'clock this afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, the old Waggaman mansion. Concerts will also be given tomorrow and Wednesday at the same hour. Tea in the garden will follow the music.

Musicians taking part in the programs are Jeno Severly, first violin; Isadore Glazner, second violin; Hendrik Essers, viola; Walter Nash, violoncello; Robert Stazny, double bass; Mrs. Gertrude Nash, piano.

Numbers to be presented this afternoon are the Haydn Quartet in E flat, Op. 64, No. 6; Passepied by Delibes; Serenade from Namouna by Lalo; the Arensky Quintet, Op. 51.

Radio Excellent Woman's Field Survey Shows

Insurance, Dentistry, Medicine, Advertising Also Rank High.

THE young woman building a career for herself today has her best opportunity in the fields of radio, insurance, dentistry, or medicine, according to a survey just completed by the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

Advertising and promotion as well as ownership and management also offer fairly good opportunities to women, Miss Mary Anderson, director of the bureau, learned through the Nation-wide study.

Banking and finance offer a limited chance, while nursing, secretarial and general office work are definitely overcrowded, the survey revealed. Journalism, though closed at present, is likely, with improved conditions, to have openings for women, especially on small town papers. Although aviation and public office offer little opportunity now, it is believed they will be fairly fertile fields as business increases throughout the country.

The survey, which also shows to what extent age and marriage cause discrimination against women, was undertaken at the request of the National Federation of Business and Profession Women's Clubs.

Twenty thousand members of the federation cooperated in making the study by answering queries about their own opportunities, advancements and difficulties.

All Types Included.

"Though the women who took part in the survey might be regarded as a picked group, their experiences may be taken as representative," said Miss Anderson when she announced the results of the study. "Women in 47 States and the District of Columbia, in all types of communities from small towns to metropolitan centers, answered questionnaires. The period chosen included 1930, 1931 and a short time prior to those years. This period was considered more representative of normal conditions than of dark depression days."

America is far from the land of golden opportunity for business and professional women, the survey revealed. At least half of the women queried were earning annually $1,625 or less. One fourth of the total number earned less than $1,210; one-fourth earned more than $2,075; only one-eighth had an income of $2,500 or more.

Physicians had highest earnings, saleswomen the lowest. Incomes of single women were on a higher level than those of married ones. College graduates filled the highest salary brackets. Women with normal school educations filled the lowest brackets. Earnings increased with experience and with age, up to 60 years.

"The survey proves the fallacy of the argument that a woman should be paid less than a man because she has no dependents to support," declared Miss Anderson. "Almost 9,000 of the women who took part in the study had some one for whose support they were entirely or partially responsible. Most of those business and professional women assumed their obligations early in their careers and will probably carry them during the majority of their employed years."

Mature Women Studied.

Two-fifths of the women studied were in clerical occupations. About 36 per cent were in different professions, approximately 13 per cent were in trades, while the remainder were scattered among domestic and personal service, public service, transportation and communication, agricultural or mining pursuits.

The women who took part in the survey formed a mature group, with the age average at 39½ years, while more than a fifth were 50 years or more old.

Out of this mature group only 408 of the 18,000 who answered the query on the subject said they had been discriminated against because they were considered too old for a job. Two-fifths of the 408 were in clerical work, about a third were teachers, approximately 8 per cent were saleswomen, and almost 4 per cent were nurses.

Six thousand married women took part in the survey. About one-fifth of that number claimed they had been discriminated against because they were married.

Saleswomen, in the lowest salaried group, are able to earn more when they branch out and train for other positions besides selling, the study showed.

Up to the end of 1930 more than a third of the women who had made a change in employment did so because they had a chance to get better jobs.

Italian Nuns in 15th Century First Made Needlepoint Lace

OLD LACE . . . the words call to mind all that is patrician and exquisite in the realm of fashion from the fifteenth century down to the present day.

It is to the patient nuns of Italy we owe the beauty of needlepoint lace. They spent long, placid hours in quiet convent gardens creating this delicate fabric. But these peaceful days were short-lived.

The rise in popularity of needlepoint lace was phenomenal. Soon the inmates of every convent were not only turning every spare moment into making lace, but they were teaching the art to their lay sisters.

Some of the lovely old needlepoint of this period was so fragile and fine that a magnifying glass was necessary to discern the individual threads.

Lace, under the name of "lacis," had been known in France from the time of the proud Catherine de Medici, who trimmed her gowns with it lavishly, but it was not until the time of Louis XIV, the age of splendor and grandeur in all arts, that French lace began to rival that of Italy. A school was started in Alencon, organized by Italian teachers. It was here French lace began to be manufactured on a large scale. This lace, some of the loveliest the world has ever known, was called Point d'Alencon.

The story of lace is closely woven with history. To know old lace is to learn the most thrilling and colorful chapters in the pages of human events. English lace, for instance, had its origin when the persecution of the Protestants in France drove the Huguenots to England. They brought with them their highly developed arts of silk weaving and lace making. These French lace makers settled in Devonshire, where they developed English lace to its best designs and finest texture.

Irish lace, while some of it is very fine, is more or less a recent adventure and as yet hasn't shown much individuality or originality. The patterns are, for the most part, copied from other countries.

Crime Is Foreseen if Schools Don't Prepare Students Better

NEW YORK, May 13 (Spl.).—Either we must have schools today or build jails tomorrow, Dr. George J. Ryan, president of the Board of Education, told a group of educators here today.

The educators met to begin a movement to repair the damage of the depression in schools in the United States.

"Unless the school system is capable of preparing young people for the leisure of tomorrow, as well as for the vocation, the country will pay for the neglect tenfold and over in crime, debility and human waste," Dr. Ryan said.

"You can patiently wait for national recovery to restore normal activity in almost every other field, but you dare not permit millions of school children to grow up either physically or mentally starved," Joseph Miller, jr., president of the Association of Public School Business Officials, asserted.

"Nothing offered in later years can fill the void caused by malnutrition of mind or body during the tender formative years of the growing child," he said.

"For the best interests of humanity the backward march of education must be halted. Our Nation can survive only so long as we are true to the basic ideals of education. We can not be loyal to our Nation if we suffer our schools to be destroyed any further."

Dr. Harold G. Campbell, superintendent of schools, said educators have been "shocked to witness the enormous toll that education has had to pay on the battlefields of the present economic depression."

"The heroism of the American teachers in their efforts to save education from the horrors of this economic war can never be fully recorded," Dr. Campbell concluded.

War Mothers Lead Service At Arlington

Capital Observes Day of Remembrance to Maternal Fealty.

Catholic University Has Program; Roosevelt Sends Message.

One by one mothers of the Nation's wars march from the Arlington Amphitheater bearing flowers. They pass down an aisle of mothers holding a carnation rope. The Tomb of the Unknown Soldier is wreathed in flowers.

In Catholic University Stadium students and teachers exalt the Universal Mother, the Virgin Mary.

And throughout the city's churches, pastors preach of mankind's debt to motherhood, of maternal fealty.

Thus Washington passed the twenty-first Mother's Day.

The bearing of flowered wreaths to the tomb of "some mother's son" in Arlington closed the tenth annual Mother's Day ceremonies of the American War Mothers which brought to the Capital representatives of women's patriotic organizations from four States.

Massed Colors in Procession.

The services opened in the Amphitheater with a massing of the colors borne by a procession of District mothers and by sons in the uniforms of the services and men's patriotic societies. The Marine Band played Dvorak's "Songs My Mother Taught Me" and "Adoration," and Maj. Chaplain Edwin Burling, U. S. A., pronounced the invocation.

Rear Admiral Clark Howe Woodward, U. S. N., paid tribute to the women who laid "60,672 of the flower of America's young manhood • • • on the Nation's altar."

Through Mrs. William E. Ochiltree, National president of the American War Mothers, President Roosevelt delivered a message. It was:

"I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to extend through you to the American War Mothers a cordial welcome to Washington. Your organization, founded as it is on the highest ideals of patriotism, self-sacrifice, faith and courage, will ever be an inspiration to the Nation. May you long enjoy the peace and tranquillity which your sons made possible for us."

Representative Rogers Speaks.

Edith Nourse Rogers, Representative from Massachusetts, developed historically the contribution of mothers to American civilization.

"The first shipload of Pilgrims to reach these shores, over 300 years ago, brought mothers to share the burdens of settling the new colony," she said. "The Pilgrim fathers did not think of going first as pioneers to provide a home for their wives. They knew full well that the women were the ones to make homes for the men."

As the services in Arlington were drawing to a close, the student bodies of Catholic University, Trinity College, Georgetown Visitation College, Georgetown University members of the Newman Clubs of George Washington and Howard Universities and the faculties of the institutions began a march across the Catholic University campus to the stadium.

Services at University.

Services there were opened with singing of the "Star-Spangled Banner" accompanied by the Catholic University Band. Louise Cullinan intoned the consecration of the Virgin as the Seat of Wisdom. The sermon was delivered by the Very Rev. Edward G. Fitzgerald, O. P., Catholic University chaplain, and the benediction by the Most Rev. James H. Ryan, Bishop of Modra and university rector. The benediction music was sung by the Catholic University Choir, directed by Dr. Leo Behrendt.

Others participating in the services were the Rev. Alphonse Freehill, O. S. B., deacon; the Rev. William Russell, sub-deacon; Daniel F. Gulnan, procession marshal, and Alfred M. Ellery, flag-bearer.

Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Started Out But One Died Asea.

Tyrannosaurus Rex Kin Reach Bronx Zoo; to Forward One.

John, of the four-ply team of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, is dead. And Washington will get only one dragon, not two.

John was the rip snortin', devil raisin' dragon from Komodo, the lost world in the Dutch East Indies where life goes on pretty much as it did a few million years ago. He and a companion were headed for the Washington Zoo. But word reached here yesterday that John Couldn't stand the sea trip. He curled up and died.

The three survivors were getting a shakedown in their new quarters at the Bronx zoo yesterday. Among their admirers was Dr. William M. Mann, director of the Capital's Zoological Garden, who went to New York last week to attend a scientific meeting.

Two of the three belligerent specimens of varanus Komodonesis, each over 9 feet long and very carniverous, will remain in the Bronx. But the borough is only a stopover for the third, whose ultimate destination is a reinforced cage in the Rock Creek Park's reptile house.

Lawrence T. E. Griswold, whose meticulously groomed whiskers give him a resemblance to King George V, and William H. Harkness captured the rare creatures on the wild South Seas island. For amateur zoologists they did a pretty neat job, even though they did bat only .750 in bringing 'em back alive.

Tough as nails and as repellent as delirium tremens, the komodo dragon has, nevertheless, proved a poor risk in captivity. If the one consigned to Washington arrives and thrives, he is expected to become the outstanding attraction of the animal family here.

Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the Bronx Zoo and whose specialty is reptiles, said the trio that did negotiate the journey are in good health and should be on exhibition a hundred years from now. And he didn't mean stuffed or pickled in brine, like poor John.

That's how the decedent arrived, his skeleton soaking in a metal barrel containing a preservative.

In mid-Pacific Mark received a dose of castor oil. Matthew, an especially dragon-like dragon, bit a hole through an enamel water pan. Officers aboard the Empress of Asia christened them. The animals, said to be descended from Tyrannosaurus Rex, were disembarked at Vancouver, British Columbia, and made the trip East by rail.

Griswold and Harkness caught 43 dragons on Komodo Isle, using wooden traps baited with pigs, but liberated all but eight of the larger ones. Having agreed to give the Dutch government half their catch in exchange for permission to explore the island, they placed four of the eight captives in the Sourabaya Zoo of Java.

Having received no word from Dr. Mann, William M. Blackburne, head keeper of the Zoo, could not say last night how soon the dragon allotted the Nation's Capital will arrive.

"We'll be ready for him," said the venerable Blackburne. "And he'll have (the dragon) a cage all to himself."

Plans Ready For Repairing On Monument

"Human Flies" Are Needed for Washington Obelisk Work.

Specifications for repairing the Washington Monument were announced yesterday by the National Park Service, following several months of study, and bids to erect scaffolding and restore the leaky, chipped obelisk will be opened May 29.

Made possible by a $100,000 Public Works allotment, overhauling of the monument will provide summer visitors with a brand-new treat. They will see "human flies" leaning against the shaft 555 feet above the sidewalk, patching its aged joints and otherwise making it more presentable from the outside and more comfortable on the inside.

The monument will remain open to visitors while the work is in progress. Oliver G. Taylor, chief of the Eastern Division, branch of engineering, will supervise the unique project. Specifications were prepared by John Nagle, his assistant.

Two contracts will be let, one for erection and dismantling of scaffolding and the other for cleaning, pointing, channeling and raking the monument.

Roosevelt Absent, Scottsboro Plea Slated to Be Made Today

Intent upon filing a plea on behalf of the Scottsboro Negroes with President Roosevelt, 30 whites and Negroes, including five mothers of the condemned boys and Ruby Bates, one of the girls allegedly attacked by the youths, visited the White House yesterday afternoon.

When the group found the President was spending the week-end on the yacht Sequoia, they decided to return this morning with their plea.

"After sending a letter two weeks ago, asking to see the President, we are informed he is not here and neither are his secretaries," Richard Moore, Negro, a member of the executive committee of the International Labor Defense, told the petitioners gathered on the sidewalk outside the White House. He spoke quietly, but with considerable determination added:

"We'll come again tomorrow morning at 11. If he refuses to see us then it will be clear he is not interested in the terrible injustice against these boys."

Then the delegation showed the curious a file of correspondence, including a telegram signed by Marvin McIntyre, Presidential secretary, saying the request for an interview must be declined because the case was one over which Alabama had jurisdiction.

PWAP Heads' Report on Art Is Requested

Robert Says Demand for Works Exceeds Possible Supply.

The 16 regional directors of Public Works of Art Project have been instructed to inform Washington headquarters how and where the thousands of pictures turned out since last December are being distributed, Lawrence W. Robert, jr., Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, said yesterday.

PWAP was officially closed last month, the pay roll now being in hands of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to permit the completion of murals and other projects which were in a mid-way stage when the program ended.

"Approximately 500 large murals have been or will be completed on the project," Robert said. "These murals have been placed in public buildings, such as Federal buildings, town halls, hospitals, schools, throughout the United States.

Many oil paintings, water colors, etchings, engravings, statuary and other products also will be placed in public buildings in localities where the work was done.

"The effort has been made by the local committees throughout the United States to place these works of art where they will have the greatest cultural influence in the various communities," said the Assistant Secretary, upon whom responsibility for the civic works project was placed.

"The demand for art work throughout the country and in Washington is far in excess of the capacity of the project to supply it. In every region applications are coming in, which, to be filled, would require indefinite continuation of the project.

"It is to be hoped that methods may be devised so that this vital native art movement may be continued."

The National PWA exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery enters its final week today, with a special night showing scheduled for tomorrow between 7 and 10 p. m. Delegates to the twenty-fifth annual convention of the American Federation of Arts will view the exhibition tomorrow night. The public also is invited.

Four other persons also received injuries as two cars overturned.

Mount Vernon Is Given Relics Of Washington

Kin of General Presents Antiques; Other Gifts Made.

Thanks to Washington Perine, who is a great-great-great-nephew of George Washington, Mount Vernon has been enriched by a sheet of the general's paper, a wax relief portrait of himself and a letter written by his half-nephew, William Augustine Washington, to Thomas Beall.

The new accessions were announced yesterday by the Mount Vernon Ladies Association, which is holding its annual meeting on the historic Potomac River estate. They are among a number of relics which will be placed on display as gifts or loans.

The sheet of paper, with water mark, is believed to be the only whole sheet of its kind in existence. The wax portrait was a family heirloom 112 years.

A chair, made in 1789, is a gift from Mrs. Adolph Boissevaine, of New York. In excellent condition, with its arms supported by gilded eagles, the chair came from the house where Washington lived when in Philadelphia.

From Miss Frances Lehr, of Baltimore, comes a portrait of Nelly Custis, supposed to be in her wedding gown. A sugar bowl originally owned by Martha Washington was presented by Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer, vice regent for Massachusetts.

An inkstand which Gen. Washington gave Capt. Francis Conway was presented to the ladies association by the captain's grandnieces, Mary Louise Battaile Ayres and Estelle Conway Battaile, of Pungoteague, Va.

Mrs. Lawrence Washington, daughter-in-law of John Augustine Washington, the last private owner of Mount Vernon, lent a portrait of Lawrence Washington, half brother of Washington, and his commission as captain in the Virginia forces.

'No Parking' Signs Will Go Up Despite U. S. Employes' Protest

Although more than 1,000 motorists have signed a petition protesting parking restrictions near the Lincoln Memorial, Capt. Patrick J. Carroll, chief of the Park Police, last night said "no parking" signs will be erected this week on the east-west road behind the Munitions Building and the road north of the West Potomac golf course.

For several weeks the ban has been in effect on Bacon drive, which runs off Constitution avenue, and on the radial road which connects Lincoln Memorial with Riverside Drive.

Employes of the Navy, Munitions, Public Health Service and Naval Hospital buildings are protesting, arguing that even under present conditions many are forced to park their cars a half-mile or more from their offices. The petition is expected to be presented to Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service, or Secretary Ickes of the Interior next Wednesday or Thursday.

Tralins' Taxi Case No Bar To Arrests

Capital Hackers Warned Breathing Spell Ends This Morning.

Cab Drivers Who Cross Montgomery Line to Face Trial.

Washington taxicab drivers crossing the District line in violation of the Maryland financial responsibility act will be subject to arrest today by Montgomery County police.

Regardless of the test case affecting Frank Tralins, promising long litigation, State's Attorney Stedman Prescott said last night the law would be enforced requiring all commercial vehicles operating in Maryland to have either financial liability insurance or to post satisfactory bond of $10,000.

Stedman stated rigid enforcement was observed last night, granting Washington cab drivers a period of grace until they had become acquainted with the situation. Earlier in the day, police of neighboring Maryland had been confronted with the question of how to construe legal technicalities when statements of the responsibility law were posted in all station houses by Capt. Johnson, of Baltimore.

Five arrests of District hackers, subsequent to Tralins', occurred in Takoma Park Friday night. Alvin A. Moxley, chief of Montgomery County police, has delayed decisive action pending expression of an attitude by E. Austin Baughman, State commissioner of motor vehicles.

Tralins will stand trial at 10 a. m. today in Rockville Police Court. His case will be carried to the Court of Appeals in case of conviction, it was indicated last night. Charged by Judge Donald A. DeLashmutt Friday with failure to appear, Tralins has been excused on evidence of prosecuting Attorney Prescott and the attorney for the defense that it was agreed to delay trial until after disposal of the Bryan Davis case.

Failure of the clerk of the court to communicate this agreement was responsible for Judge DeLashmutt's ordering forfeiture of $50 collateral bond, which will be returned. The minimum fine for failure to comply with the responsibility act is $100.

Bonus Army Puts Care Away to Play

Ball Game Occupies Force at Camp.

Bonus demands were forgotten for nine baseball innings yesterday at Camp Hunt, Va., where World War veterans—a corporal's guard returned from the 20,000 who knocked at the doors of Congress two years ago—are camped.

Leaders of the reduced force announced they will broadcast an appeal tonight for veterans to send delegates to the convention opening here Thursday.

A parade of Washington women is protest against veterans using District relief money. It is sponsored being organized for tomorrow to by Eddie McConnell, Gen. John J. Pershing's chauffeur in the World War. Mrs. McConnell will head the procession to the White House to see Louis M. Howe, secretary to President Roosevelt.

Professor to Speak At Meeting Tonight

Prof. Louis B. Schmidt, head of the history and Government department at Iowa State College, will deliver the presidential address at the sixteenth annual meeting of the Agriculaural History Society in Scholl's Cafe, 1032 Connecticut avenue tonight.

A business meeting at 8 p. m. will be preceded by dinner at 6:30 p. m.

Nats Break Up Pitching Duel With Late Rally to Beat Tigers, 7-4

6-Run Attack In 7th Ends Bridges

Detroit Pitcher's Lack of Control Leads to Loss Before 10,000.

Cronin Drives in Three Runs; Whitehill Gets Credit for Victory.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

THE Nats stretched their losing streak to four and six-ninths games before they caught up with Tom Bridges, of the Tigers, in the seventh inning yesterday. Then they won, 7 to 4, and zoomed all the way out of fifth place into a tie for fourth.

The Tigers were headed toward victory until the seventh, when Bridges collapsed under the weight of two bases on balls, a hit batter, a two-base hit and a couple of singles, dumping them into defeat.

Six large and luscious Washington runs came cascading across the plate in that seventh inning, at a time when the Tigers were sunning themselves in a 3-1 lead and the 10,000 in the stands visioning another triumph for Bridges, whose habit of beating the Nats was thought incurable.

Fred Schulte made the skids ready for Bridges, who had been pitching four-hit ball, when he led off that seventh inning with a double down the third-base line, but it was no fault of Bridges, though, when Johnny Stone beat out a hit to Owen that refused to roll foul. It was very much Bridges' fault, however, when he hit Ossie Bluege on the elbow to fill the bases.

Bridges Gets Hurt.

"This hurts me worse than it does you," Bridges probably said as he whacked Bluege with his first pitch, and it did. Along came Eddie Phillips to slam a long fly into center field that scored one run and moved the others up. They sent Dave Harris in to bat for Earl Whitehill and Bridges solved this problem by passing Harris to fill the bases again.

But this walking business of Bridges apparently became habit-forming because he also walked Kuhel to force the tying run over the plate. By this time, Mickey Cochrane, making his managerial debut in Washington, deduced that Bridges was not effective, and he hauled him out of there in favor of Carl Fischer, an escaped Nat.

Buddy Myer slammed a long fly into right field to score the third run of the inning and then Fischer filled 'em up again by hitting Manush on the back of the neck, hurting nothing but the ball. Along came Joe Cronin to emerge from his batting slump with a single into center and two more runs trickled across the plate. By this time, anything could happen, so Schulte got his second hit of the inning, a single into left that scored Kuhel with run No. 6.

Up until the seventh, Ray Hayworth, the catcher who substituted for Cochrane, had kept the Tigers in the ball game, driving in all three runs Detroit had scored off Whitehill, who paved the way for his own departure by starting the Tigers off in their half of the seventh with a pair of passes.

Nats to Send Klumpp and Filley Away

By Frank H. Young.

CATCHER ELMER KLUMPP and Pitcher Mark Filley will be sent away and Infielder Johnny Kerr will be transferred to a coaching role in order that the Nats may get down to a 23-player limit, which is necessary by midnight tomorrow. Klumpp will be returned to Chattanooga, but on 24-hour option, while Filley goes to Albany, Clark Griffith, Nat owner, stated last night.

"This catching proposition worries me," said Griffith, "for neither Berg nor Sewell is available now because of injuries, leaving only Phillips. I'd put Sewell on the voluntary retired list but for the fact that it would keep him out for 60 days, and I know he'll be ready long before that. Should anything happen to Phillips, I guess Berg could limp about behind the plate until I could get Klumpp back."

Sewell, by the way, showed up at the stadium yesterday with a metal splint in the palm of his hand and with his injured finger bound around it so that he can get it in the habit of bending.

The second game of the Tiger series and the next to last of this home stay of the Nats will be played this afternoon. General Al Crowder, who not only has been worrying about not having his fast ball but also by the serious illness of his wife, will pitch for the home team. Mickey Cochrane likely will turn over the Tiger assignment to Vic Sorrell.

It has just been learned that last Saturday morning Manager Rogers Hornsby, of the Browns, offered to trade Pitcher Ed Wells to the Nats in exchange for Bobby Burke. Owner Clark Griffith turned a deaf ear to the proposition and that afternoon Bobby justified his faith by hurling brilliantly in that 17-inning fracas.

Cecil Travis probably will not be ready for regular third-base work for a week, Manager Joe Cronin admitted yesterday. He was withdrawn from Saturday's opening game in the eighth because he complained of dizziness, and was rested up yesterday.

Ralph (Red) Kress reported to the Nats yesterday, and was most enthusiastic over the shift in clubs. "I figure I'm with a pennant winner," he said, "and the chance of getting a cut of that world series melon is plenty encouragement to make me step out if I get a chance."

Although the schedule shows the Nats have an open date Wednesday, before opening their first Western invasion the following day in Cleveland, Owner Griffith has booked an exhibition game in Cincinnati with the Reds on that day.

Red Sox Win by 14-2 In Orgy of Home Runs

Golf Pairs Even In 10-Year Play

Atlanta, May 13 (AP).—After squaring off against each other at least once a week for the past 10 years, golfing twosomes composed of Frank Reynolds, Fred Phillips, Hugh Moses and Claude Chappell decided to check up on team standings.

Their cards, carefully kept through the years, showed that Reynolds and Phillips, partners, playing Moses and Chappell, completed a decade of battling all square. Out of 520 engagements each had won an even 260. So they decided to continue the competition for another 10 years, at the end of which another accounting will be made in an effort to determine the winning pair.

Gomez Pitches Shut-Out for Yankees

NEW YORK, May 13 (AP).—Lefty Gomez pitched superbly to win his fifth straight mound victory by the shut-out route today, and Lou Gehrig and Ben Chapman backed him up by driving in four runs apiece. As a result of this fine teamwork the Yankees tightened their hold on the American League lead by walloping Cleveland, 8 to 0, in the first game of their series.

Gehrig's contribution was his eighth home run of the season and his sixth in eight days. It was a mighty wallop off Lefty Lloyd Brown's delivery with the bases full in the first inning.

Chapman handled the rest of the run-getting job with two triples and a home run.

Gomez fanned only five Cleveland batters, a low mark for him, but he granted only four singles, two by Billy Knickerbocker, one walk, and kept the Indians popping the ball into the air all afternoon.

As a result of his work the Yanks tied one fielding record and threatened another. The club had only one assist, that one going to Frank Crosetti when he threw out Spencer in the seventh, and Gehrig, at first, had only the one put-out.

1,000 Golfers Vie Today in Open Trials

20 Courses Will Find Crack Players Vying in Eliminations.

NEW YORK, May 13 (AP).—Nearly 1,000 golfers will tramp 20 courses tomorrow in the annual sectional trials for the National Open golf championship, to be played at the Merion Cricket Club, Ardmore, Pa., beginning June 7.

Thirty-six of the field of 150 at Merion automatically qualify either by virtue of finishing among the low 30 and ties in the last championship or through their membership on the American Walker Cup team now abroad. Five more have qualified in the Lost Angeles sectional trial held a week ago. Tomorrow the other 109 places will be filled from among 984 candidates.

Although most of the leading contenders are exempt from the 36-hole medal play sectional trials, a sprinkling of top-flight golfers will have to compete.

The entries and qualifying places open in each of the 20 districts:

Boston, 60 and 7; New York, 158 and 16; Philadelphia, 150 and 16; Richmond, 27 and 3; Atlanta, 14 and 2; Dallas, 18 and 2; Pittsburgh, 62 and 7; Cleveland, 57 and 6; Detroit, 38 and 4; Chicago, 158 and 16; Minneapolis, 17 and 2; St. Louis, 14 and 2; Kansas City, 39 and 4; Denver, 16 and 2; San Francisco, 8 and 2; Portland, 9 and 2; Omaha, 14 and 2; Dayton, 51 and 6; Buffalo, 16 and 2; Nashville, 19 and 2; Oklahoma, 39 and 4.

District Stars Play.

Richmond, Va., May 13 (Spl.).—Al Houghton, Kenwood, was the only golfer among the Washington contingent to give Old Man Par a battle in practice rounds for the sectional qualifying trials for the National Open Championship here today. Houghton took a leisurely par 71.

Mel Shorey, East Potomac, and George Diffenbaugh, Indian Spring, both scored 74's. Walter Cunningham, Burning Tree, reported a 76 and Al Treder, Manor, and Bob Barnett, Chevy Chase, staggered around in 77. Maury Nee and his borther, Dermot, of Columbia, did not report scores. Dick Wilson, former Georgetown University star, now of Pinehurst, N. C., turned in perhaps the lowest practice score—70.

Twenty-seven golfers from five States will compete for the three qualifying places starting at 9:20 a. m. tomorrow.

Paulino Gets Draw With Schmeling

Rushes Max at Start to Gain Lead as 30,000 Watch Struggle.

BARCELONA, Spain, May 13 (U.P.). Max Schmeling's dream of recapturing the world heavyweight championship was shattered today when the German Dempsey was held to a 12-round draw by blood-spattered old Paulino Uzcudun, the Basque woodchopper, whose defeat in 1929 sent Schmeling soaring toward championship heights.

More than 30,000 fans, including President Companys of Catalonia, saw the durable 35-year-old Paulino gamely stand off the former champion.

The bout featured Barcelona's annual "boxing festival." It was preceded by 30 other fights of four rounds each. There were three rings. The boxing started in the huge Mont Juich Stadium at 11 a. m. Paulino and Schmeling started at 5:50. Both were given a tremendous ovation.

Paulino Rushes Foe.

Paulino rushed from his corner at the opening gong and tore after Maxie, slugging savagely with both hands at the German's head and body. Schmeling tried to jab him away, but the Basque's elbow defense shook off most of Maxie's counters.

After the first round, Schmeling was more accurate. He matched blows with Uzcudun, doing considerable damage at long range. As the Basque tried to rush in, in the eighth, Schmeling stepped in with a whistling right hook that slashed Paulino's left brow. It was a deep gash. Paulino continued his body attack.

In the ninth a long, straight right gashed the Basque's left cheek. Paulino bled profusely. Schmeling also was smeared, and some of the ringside correspondents were spattered.

Despite handicaps, Paulino attacked wildly. Schmeling shook most of the blows and tried to beat the Basque back with counter punches. Both men were in excellent condition and fought to the final bell without showing fatigue.

Many spectators thought Schmeling had a slight advantage but the draw decision was applauded loudly.

Schmeling weighed 187; Uzcudun, 208.

Griffith Blue Coals, 7; Warwicks, 3.
Dor-A, 12; Millers, 8.

FORTY-TWO-year-old Heinie Webb, the only one left of the original Union Printers, expressed as keen satisfaction as any in the twenty-one years he has been playing around local sandlots yesterday in the 7-4 victory of the Printers over Toney Burruto's Blue Flame Shop Nine as the National City league launched its season with a program of seven games.

In the other encounters Ray Davidson pitched Murphy's Five and Ten to an 8-1 win over Gordon's Cafeteria, St. Joseph's overwhelmed Federal A. C. 19 to 3, R. G. Dunne Service slugged out a 15-3 score on Wash B. Williams, Pig-n-Whistle with young Adger "Gigles" Adair in the box trimmed Congress Heights, Willie Glascoe's Griffith Blue Coals won over Warwicks by score of 7 to 3. Dor-A outslugged Miller Furniture Warwicks by score of 7 to 3 and Co., 12-8.

A three-run rally in the seventh decided the game for the Printers, Jack Caspar with a double and triple did everything he could to ruin Heinie's day. Johnny Bozek, Tots Long, and Brother Harding enjoyed field days in St. Joe's hitting rampage, as did Crump and J. Wade, with four hits, in R. G. Dunne-Wash B. Williams fray. Pitchers Kingman and Stankus of Blue Coals held the Warwicks at bay throughout, and young Adair showed the same effectiveness in the Pig-n-Whistle game at the Heights.

Japan and China Split In Far East Olympics

Manila, May 13 (AP).—Preliminaries of the Sino-Japanese sports "war" in the Far Eastern Olympics were even today with Japan victorious at baseball in the second day of the event and China winning at volley ball.

Japan's baseball team pounded the ball to all corners to defeat China, 20 to 1, but the Chinese evened matters by winning three sets to two at volley ball.

Last night China had swamped Japan in the opening basket ball game by a 42-to-27 score to avenge a clean sweep by Japan in the preliminaries of the tennis competition.

Hecht, Kanns Nines Store Winners

Palais Royal Defeated in Tenth, 3-2; Lansburgh Bows by 18 to 15.

Standings of the Teams.

BILL MITCHELL had the edge in a pitching duel with Jack Kaldenback as Hecht Co. team gained undisputed first-place position in the Departmental Store League by defeating the Palais Royal nine, 3 to 2, in an exciting 10-inning game. On the adjacent diamond, Kanns broke into the win column by outlasting Lansburgh in an old-fashioned slugging bee that produced 33 runs. Now, just a minute. The weary scorekeeper reports tabulations show 18 runs for Kanns and only 15 for Lansburgh.

The Hecht-Palais Royal game was a series of thrilling rallies, climaxed by Aylor's liner to left that scored Sheaffer with the winning run.

Kaldenback's double in the eighth had put his team out in front and apparently had sewn up the game, but a timely hit by Messink, coupled with an error and Aylor's long fly, tied the score.

Sharing honors with Mitchell and Aylor was the fine defensive play of the Hecht infield, which cut off several scores with three lightning double plays

A Spot in West Virginia

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, May 13.—My friends: This is not a sports column, but sports columns can wait. I write them the other 364 days of the year. In the course of my travels pursuing this athlete and that, such a game, or such an event, I pass through many queer places, cast my eyes upon amazing sights. It is my idea, my friends, to give you an account of one of the most amazing experiences of my whole career as an itinerant journalist. Listen to me closely. For this thing you will not believe. I have discovered the last stronghold of prohibition in America, the one remaining place where you can not get a drink.

No, no, no! I will not name the place. It is my secret. I discovered it. I will not have this shrine desecrated, trampled by hordes of thousands who will go flocking thither in search of this stern oasis in the midst of plenty. This place shall make me a fortune. It shall make me rich beyond the dreams of avarice.

I was on my way home from the Kentucky Derby. Faugh! Kentucky is wet. In Louisville you pick up the telephone and ask for a mint julep, and in three minutes it is at your door. It was late at night. My car broke down. I was at the village of W——. Do not fear, I have not used the right name. Tired and weary and needing a stimulant, I summoned the bellmonkey and said: "Fetch me a double brandy, son, I have traveled far today and I am weary."

The Afrelt rolled his eyes and said: "Mah goodness, suh, ah cain't fetch you no brandy, suh; it's dry lak de camel's kidneys in dis hyah place. No suh; yes, suh; sorry, suh!"

I will be brief. He said to see the druggist. The druggist, whose blessed name, of course, was Doc, said he was fresh out of prescriptions and couldn't do nothin', but if I'd go see Sam at the livery stable. I went to see Sam. I nearly swooned with joy. Sam wanted to see my cards. Do you understand? My cards! I showed him my baseball writer's card and my police card, my old membership in the Stork Club and Merry Go Round, and my pilot's license. Sam cranked up his old Ford with the one headlight and we drove off into the gathering mountain gloom, Sam and I.

We drove for an hour, higher and higher, and higher and deeper and deeper. We came to the lonely house. Sam said: "When they ask yuh whut yo' all wants, stranger, tell 'em as how Joe sez it was O. K. and like as not they'll sell yuh a pint. 'Taint aged lak it ought ter be, but it wun't do yuh no harm if you' don't spill none on yer skin."

Joe! Dear old Joe! Joe said it would be O. K. Why should this sweet miracle have befallen me, of all the hundreds of thousands who must be longing once more to invoke the name of Joe?

I said the beloved name. I got the pint. I paid 75 cents for it. It was the color of young paint remover. It tasted like linseed oil. I took it back to my lodgings and later dined with the bottle set at the foot of my chair under the table. When the waiter's back was turned I sneaked some into my glass, forgive me.

I can not write more now. My heart is too full. The memory of that wonderful, wonderful experience. And I alone know the secret!

Dougan Meets Old Rival in Landers

Capital Boy Out to Avenge Norfolk Defeat in Feature at Portner's.

LEROY DOUGAN and Billy Landers, perennial featherweight enemies, will be making their upteenth attempt to settle once and for the all the question of supremacy when they square off for a ten-round main event at Portner's tomorrow. Dougan was declared the winner, amidst a shower of boos, the first two times these gamecocks went to the post, but the Norfolk Noggin Knocker scored a knockout and a decision in their next two engagements.

Landers' knockout was scored in Norfolk and Dougan returned weeping long and loud that he had been the victim of a hurried count in his opponent's native bailiwick. The last time they swapped punches, the battles was so furious and so close that Landers' edge, if any, lay in his cleaner fighting methods, which shone in comparison to the roughhouse tactics employed by the Arkansas Fighting Scotchman.

Dougan Stopped McShea.

Since their last encounter, Dougan has scored upsets in his last three fights. He knocked out the much touted Johnny McShea, pounded the highly regarded Pete Galiano into a technical knockout and scored handily over Dominick Nicco, Frankie Covelli's stablemate and one of the iron men of his division. Landers has scored 20 consecutive wins in his last 20 fights.

Joe Green, Harry Groves' ace featherweight prospect, has been matched with a tough semifinal customer in rugged Lou Voda in one of three sixes carded to round out the card. Green has been undefeated in professional ranks, but Voda boasts not only ability to take it, but a lusty wallop.

In other sixes Henry Irving opposes his one-time knockout conqueror, Bob Turner, and Mike Groves does battle with some featherweight, perhaps Nay Palmer.

Celtics Defeat Rockville, 7 to 6

Losers' Rally Near End Is Short; Caball and Coleman Bat Stars.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., May 13 (Spl.).—Caball Day was unofficially celebrated here this afternoon at the local ball yard as the sterling St. Marys Celtics outfielder crashed out four hits in his team's 7-6 victory over the Rockville A. A. One of Cabell's blows, a triple to the deep center field fence, was one of the longest drives ever seen here. A double and two singles rounded out his day's work. Ike "Doc" Dreyfus started on the hill for the Celtics and, when he tired at the end of the sixth, he had allowed six hits and two runs. McIntyre, who relieved him, however, had only his glove and the Rockville hitters pounced on him for four runs in the last three innings.

The Rockville team fought hard to stay in the ball game, and was within striking distance throughout, but it lacked the scoring punch.

Bill Coleman, Rockville's southpaw, was the batting star for his team, getting a single, double, and a home run in four times at bat. His circuit smash cleared the fence in dead left field by about 20 feet.

Mrs. Sloane Wins Fortune on Cavalcade, High Quest and Other Auction Bargains

Derby Victor Bought for $1,200

Time Clock Among Trio That Have Netted Sum of $109,580.

Preakness Captor Cost $3,500 to Shrewd Woman Expert.

THE old saw that nobody wins in the racing game has been disproved decisively, for a couple of years anyway, by a mere woman—Mrs. Isabelle Dodge Sloane, whose Cavalcade led the procession in this year's Kentucky Derby and whose High Quest reached the heights in the Preakness. A better horseman than 99 per cent of the gentlemen who gain admission to race track clubhouses from Rockingham to Tanforan by virtue of "Owner-Trainer" badges which dangle from their overstuffed vests, Mrs. Sloane has shown the side-of-the-mouth boys several things or two about picking up bargains in horseflesh.

In August, 1931, Mrs. Sloane purchased at auction, from the Fasig-Tipton Co's sales at Saratoga, two equines of unknown quality—Inlander and Okapi. For Inlander she shelled out $7,200. Okapi, not so well bred, she got for a mere $6,500. Since then Inlander, who is as happy in the mud as a mama pig, has won $53,755 in purses and Okapi, a dazzling sprinter, has accumulated $27,475 purse money for Mrs. Sloane's Brookmeade Stable.

Horseflesh Bargains.

In 1933, Mrs. Sloane returned to the auctions at Saratoga in a real bargain-hunter's mood. She acquired three horses—High Quest, Cavalcade and Time Clock. She splurged on High Quest, handing over $3,500 for him. Cavalcade, her pride and joy, cost $1,200 and Time Clock $700! This trio, purchased for a total of $5,400, has won $109,580 in purses and prospects are very, very bright for the future.

High Quest, the son of Sir Gallahad 3d and Etoile Filante (the Fair Play filly), is a half brother of Fair Star, America's biggest juvenile winner in 1926. Which explains the $3,500 purchase price. His best performances have been in the Hopeful, Saratoga's richest 2-year-old affair, the Eastern Shore and Saturday's Preakness. In the Hopeful he finished second to E. R. Bradley's imported filly, Bazaar, and beat Discovery, Red Wagon, Singing Wood, Spy Hill, First Minstrel, Roustabout, Observant, Black Buddy, Hadagal, Sir Thomas, National Anthem and Standpat.

In the Eastern Shore he gave fair warning of what his stablemate might expect in the Preakness, by defeating Cavalcade. He also outran Wise Daughter, High Glee, Bazaar, Discovery, Chicstraw, Sun Tempest and Hadagal—for a $10,125 purse. Winning the Wood Memorial at Jamaica a week ago last Saturday boosted his winnings to $19,255 and the $25,175 from the Preakness jumped him into the big money class with a total of $44,430. Mrs. Sloane and her trainer, Bob Smith, predict that he will play an important part in the coming Belmont which probably will be worth no less than $40,000 to the winner. High Quest was not nominated for the Kentucky Derby, or his earnings might have been even higher.

Cavalcade Big Winner.

Cavalcade was imported in utero from England and sent to the auction block by F. Wallis Armstrong, proprietor of the Meadowview Stud. Last year the son of Lancegay and Hastily won $15,750. This year his winnings in the Chesapeake ($6,750), the $28,175 from the Derby, $700 from an overnight race at Havre de Grace and $2,500 for second in the Preakness have put him out front among the juveniles with a total of $53,875. He is not eligible for the Belmont, but probably will be ready for the American Derby revival, a $25,000 added affair at Washington Park.

Time Clock, the son of On Watch and Milfoil, was placed on the block by the estate of Eben Byers. A slow starter, but great stretch battler, he showed impressively in the Chesapeake and Kentucky Derby, although out of the money in both. He captured the revival of the Florida Derby at Hialeah to bring his total winnings to $11,275.

If the form charts are any indication, Mrs. Sloane probably will be buying Man o' Wars and Zevs next year—for $25 a dozen.

$500,000 in Horses Will Take Jumps in 3-Day Hampton Show

318 Entries Listed as Deadline Falls, Including Some of Classiest Animals in East and South; Noted Stables Will Be Represented.

HAMPTON, Va., May 13 (AP).—A half million dollars' worth of horseflesh will take the jumps in the Hampton horse show Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Harry R. Houston, chairman of the show association here, said there were 318 entries when the deadline fell today. Among them were some of the classiest show horses between the Carolinas and New York.

The show will raise the curtain for the Virginia horse show circuit. Anchorages have been reserved for 50 yachts at the Hampton Yacht Club. The entries, from North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York, include horses from such stables as those of Mrs. Mathew Fontaine Thraves, Mrs. Leslie Hundt, Miss Deborah G. Rood, Miss Doris Blondell and Mrs. Dorothy Schade.

Outstanding among the entries will be Albert H. Handley's famous King Red Vine, from Goldsboro, a chestnut stallion; Admiral Cary T. Grayson's My Own, Dr. Asa Shield's Peter the Great and a host of others entered by Frank Corley, Ed Vaughan, Dr. J. P. McDonald, J. L. Camp, S. W. Rawls, George Lee, Menalcus Lankford, William B. Newcomb, Ernest Jones and Dr. E. T. Trice.

Mrs. Schade, of Hilton Village, will have 40 juniors in the ring at one time.

Gov. Peery, if it is possible for him to return from Washington in time Saturday, will present the Alfred G. Vanderbilt Challenge trophy, on which Frank W. Corley and Ed Vaughan, both of Richmond, now hold two legs. The contest for the third leg on the trophy between these two will be one of the features of the show. Lieut. Gov. James H. Price will present the cup given in the ladies class by Miss Rood.

The show officially will open with an assembly at Old Point Thursday night. The assembly will be followed by a hound show, a horn-blowing contest and a moonlight fox hunt. Friday the horse show proper will be opened—with 33 classes. Friday night there will be a steamer excursion on Hampton Roads and the Chesapeake Bay. Saturday night the show ball will be held at Old Point.

The best Army horses at Fort Monroe will be in the show—a score of them, and 40 riders. Army officers. Gen. Joseph Tracy, commanding the coast defense; Col. Harold E. Cloak, at Fort Monroe; Col. Albert Sneed, commandant of Langley Field, and Capt. Usher, the Langley recreation officer, expect to attend.

A 60-piece band from Fort Monroe will furnish the music, and a grandstand of 2,500 capacity from Langley Field has been added to the facilities of the horse show grounds.

Not all of the show features will be ashore. That part of the fleet not on review will be in Hampton Roads, and the new aircraft carrier Ranger will be on show at her dock in Newport News.

Albany-New York Race to Johnson

New York, May 13 (AP).—C. H. (Chart) Johnson, 23-year-old draftsman from Cranberry Lake, N. J., today drove his midget motorboat, Dorchart III, to victory in the annual Albany to New York outboard race.

Sending his Class C boat, which had a handicap of 22 minutes and 55 seconds, down the 132 miles in 2 hours 59 minutes and 38 seconds, Johnson finished the long grind at 10:38:53 a. m., nearly ten minutes before Ted Roberts, New York professional driving a smaller Class A craft. Roberts had an elapsed time of 3:46:12.

Third went to Clayton Bishop, Onset, Mass., and then followed Joel Thorne, New Rochelle, N. Y.; Leon Rogers, New York; Fred Jacoby, jr., veteran North Bergen, N. J., driver; Dick Gierson, Glenridge, N. J.; Philip Peterson, Larchmont, N. Y. and 16-year-old Gar Wood, jr., son of the famous speed boat driver from Algonac, Mich.

Sixty-six boats left the State Capital, but only 18 had reached the judges before the dead line at 3 p. m.

Bomba's Clout Decisive for Colonials

Front Royal Stars Ninth G. W. Victim in Row; Bow by 6-3 Score.

FRONT ROYAL, Va., May 13 (Spl.).—Larry Boerner, Washington right-hander who formerly pitched for the Boston Red Sox, allowed only two hits as relief pitcher for Front Royal All Stars here today against George Washington University, but one of these blows was a terrific home run by Don Bomba, Colonial catcher, which clinched the game for the visitors. The score was 6 to 3 and the victory No. 9 in G. W.'s current streak.

Bomba's smash over the left-field fence came in the eighth with Capt. Otta Zahn on base and relieved the anxiety of the Colonials, who saw the home team pull up to 3-4 terms with a sixth-inning rally.

Tarver Winning Hurler.

Bill Tarver was credited with the victory in his first pitching performance for G. W. He hurled well until he injured his foot during the All-Stars rally and was relieved by Archie Scrivener, who held the opponents scoreless, despite their filling the bases in each of the last three innings.

Dusek Returns In Feature Thursday

Hopes to End McMillan's Local Build-Up on Mat at Auditorium.

RUDE RUDY DUSEK, who last week almost caused a riot by going through all of the motions of having an eye-affecting acid about him in his bout with Ernie Zeller, returns to the rassle wars at the Auditorium Thursday night, this time in the feature bout and against Jarring Jim McMillan.

Whether Dusek's last stunt was just an act has the fans talking their heads off every time they get together and a goodly gathering is expected to be on hand for the coming fracas to try to delve further into the matter. The chances are, however, that Rudy will consider his last week's stunt as a closed book and will take McMillan more seriously so that there will be no doubt of his superiority in case he wins.

McMillan Rides Time.

McMillan is quite a hardy young fellow, who can take plenty while biding his time for an opening for his flying tackle. Against Hans Kampfer last week, he was second best until the very end. Then the German strong man was caught unawares with a drive into the midruff and, in no time at all, he could hear nothing but the birdies singing.

Both McMillan and Dusek have worked up close to a bout with one of the big boys—Jim Londos or Jim Browning—and the winner likely will be given a title crack as a reward, meaning that quite a battle is in the offing.

Promoter Joe Turner is busily engaged arranging the usual quartet of other bouts to complete the card, and he promises that all will be good ones.

Six-Run Attack in Seventh Inning Ends Bridges; Whitehall Is Hero.

lowed Myer's walk with a single into right field. Cronin scored Myer from third with a long fly to center.

The Tigers got that run back to tie the score in the fifth on Rogell's single, a sacrifice and Hayworth's one-base sock into left, but Whitehill, who had been pitching tolerably good ball developed a wild streak in the seventh. He passed Gehringer and Rogell with none out, saw them sacrificed along by Greenberg, and then saw Hayworth drive 'em both home with a single past Bluege.

That 3-1 lead stood up very briefly, however. The Nats came in from the field, and with the help of Bridges, piled up those six runs that took the competition out of the ball game. Jack Russell allowed the Tigers a run in the eighth on three successive singles after two were out, but it didn't matter much.

This Morning:

Hayes at any given moment and Hayes' arm is now ailing. Boken is about as graceful as a lummox around that second sack, but a great pair of hands offset his lack of form. At that, he can console himself with the fact that he is not is awkward as was Joe Cronin when that young man, all arms and elbows and no place to put 'em, broke into the league.

All work and no plagiarism makes a dull column, so with one eye on the official American League averages nearby I am giving you the low-down on some of the whys and wherefores of the pennant race.

The Yankees are where they are, it seems, because two chaps who were of very little account last season are now pitching winning ball. I speak of Lefty Gomez and Red Ruffing, who have turned in five victories apiece without the semblance of a defeat and the season not quite a month old.

And the Nats are where they are because the two gents who at this time last year were out in front of the pitching brigade—Earl Whitehill and Al Crowder—have won exactly one game between them, something I would not be able to quote if it were not for that six-run rally of the Nats yesterday that gave Whitehill his first victory.

If you go into this pitching situation on the Washington Club, you will discover that Al Thomas and Monte Weaver are the only pitchers who can show a better than .500 average. With the Nats second in batting with an average of .278, the blame for their low estate in the league standing can be laid directly at the door of the pitching.

At that it's rather tough on the Washington pitchers to have to struggle along with the clean-up man, Joe Cronin, hitting only .186.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

For further proof address the author, inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

When engineers developed methods of taking on ballast for submarines so that the craft could easily submerge, they were doing just what Nature did for the penguins long ago. The penguins need ballast at certain times of the year, and it is only during those times that they carry it, according to naturalists.

During the moulting season, when the birds lose their feathers, they are unable to swim, and consequently can not fish in the sea for food. Accordingly they go on a long fast, and by the time their new feathers have come in they are weak and lean—unable to dive for food as they usually do.

To overcome this they select round, smooth stones, which they swallow until they have enough ballast to dive for food without too much effort. Observers say that at no other time of the year do penguins swallow stones.

Strange as it seems, the red coloring material in many lipsticks, as well as in some candies, is made from insects. The insect, called the cochineal bug, yields a brilliant red color when killed and dried by heat. The essential coloring matter of the cochineal is carminic acid, a purplish red substance found also in certain other insects and in some plants.

Culbertson on Bridge

PLAYING FOR AN AVERAGE.

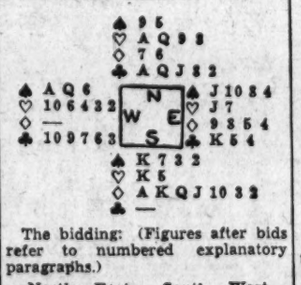
When a Bridge player in a Duplicate game makes a Small Slam contract by means of a very fine squeeze it is not surprising if he is rather disappointed to discover, when he writes down the score, that he has made exactly the same number of tricks as every other person holding his hand. A hand that produces the same result when played by a half dozen or more players is unusual. It occurs just about as frequently as does the proverbial blue moon.

However, in a Duplicate game in New York City recently a hand was dealt in a six-table Duplicate game on which every one of the contending players bid and made a Small Slam in diamonds. The last man to play the hand was Mr. Alphonse Moyse, jr., and when he had fulfilled his contract, before looking at the little traveling score slip, he felt that he had done something worth while, only to learn that every other player had done as well. The hand was:

North, Dealer
Neither side vulnerable



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1♡ | Pass | 3◇(1) | Pass |
| 4♣(2) | Pass | 6◇(3) | Pass |
| Pass | Pass | | |

1—While South has but 3 honor-tricks, the strength of the diamond suit justifies the Forcing Takeout.
2—North correctly shows his second biddable suit.
3—South cannot use the Four-Five Notrump Convention, and in view of his honor holding decides to bid the Slam at once. Later investigation disclosed that at every table but one, against the six-diamond contract the spade Ace was opened and, of course, from that point on South had nothing to do except draw the trumps and discard his two remaining losers upon the heart Ace and the club Ace.

At the table where Mr. Moyse played the hand, however, West made an Opening which proved much more difficult. Instead of opening the spade Ace he led the heart three. Now the hand could be made only by means of a squeeze. The trick was won in Dummy with the Queen, the club Ace laid down, upon which a small spade was discarded, and the Queen of clubs led from the Dummy, East covered and South ruffed. The Declarer then laid down his remaining trumps. West found that he could not defend all fronts and decided to give up defense in the club suit, retaining the spade Ace-Queen and two hearts. In consequence Mr. Moyse by very fine play secured exactly the same result as others in his position had presented to them by the Opening lead.

TOMORROW'S HAND

West, Dealer
Neither side vulnerable

The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

Walt Mason, Himself

There's no refuge for the sinner, there's no haven that's secure; in the end the law's the winner, that is certain, that is sure. O'er the wires the tale goes flashing of the sinful deeds he's done, of the phoney check he's cashing, of his misdeeds with a gun. Forty thousand cops are looking for his traces everywhere, only waiting to be hooking their fierce talons in his hair. To the jungle land proceeding, he may look for safety there, but the Hottentots are reading his description everywhere. Though the information's meager they set forth with one accord, for the Hottentots are eager for the advertised reward. They will do without their dinner and desert their huts and tents, to arrest the noted sinner, who will net them 50 cents. If the sinner goes pirooting in the weary waste of snow, he will hear the warning hooting of the cagy Eskimo. And the native cops will rubber, through the frozen wastes they'll look, they'll forsake the meal of blubber for a chance to nail a crook. Everywhere the law is botching all the schemes the sinner frames; everywhere there's waitful watching to upset his choicest games. It is wiser, it is better to observe, in this our town, both the spirit and the letter of the law as written down.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — Going Up — By Harry J. Tuthill

OFFICIALS OF THE VENDETTA DETECTIVE AGENCY FOUND THEY HAD SOLVED ONLY PART OF A PROBLEM, WHEN THE MAN WHO CONFESSED LOSING HIS MEMORY TO SAVE HIMSELF FROM MATRIMONY SUGGESTED A PECULIAR ENDING FOR CASE NO. 1.
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. 5-14
FRANKLY MAJOR, YOUR OFFER TO PAY US EXTRA TO FORGET THAT WE SOLVED THIS CASE IS—
ONCE MORE GENTLEMEN I RAISE MY HAND AND ASSURE YOU THAT WHEN SIBYL SUGGESTED MARRIAGE I MERELY LAUGHED. LATER, WHEN I FOUND IT WAS NO KIDDING MATTER—
WE ADMIT YOUR STORY IS VERY SAD, JT.—
BOYS, LET'S TALK TURKEY. I'M OFFERING YOU TWICE AS MUCH FOR JUST FORGETTING ALL ABOUT THIS CASE AS I AGREED TO GIVE YOU FOR SOLVING IT.
IN OTHER WORDS, YOU WANT US TO ADMIT TO THE PRESS THAT THIS CASE WAS JUST TOO MUCH FOR US.
THAT'S OUT RIGHT NOW.
BOYS DO YOU REALIZE WHAT MY MARRIAGE WOULD MEAN TO MANY OTHER DEAR FRIENDS? WHY IT WOULD JUST PANIC THEM.
WELL WE'RE VERY SORRY IF MRS. DARDANELLA HAS, AS YOU SAY, SORT OF DRAFTED YOU AS A FIANCE BUT—WE CAN'T—
BOYS, I'LL ADMIT YOU'VE GOT ME BY THE NECK. WHAT IS YOUR BEST OFFER TO LEAVE THIS CASE UNSOLVED? I'LL UP MY LAST OFFER $500. NOW NOW, DON'T SHAKE YOUR HEADS. I'LL UP IT SOME MORE.

Dear Edgerton:— I said I didn't want to see you again, but I have just learned some facts that make me realize that perhaps you were not entirely to blame for what has taken place. If there is anything that I can do to straighten out this misunderstanding you might want to explain you'll be glad to have you come and tell me. Dixie
I REMEMBER NOW, SIR! —THAT LETTER WAS ON THE TRAY WHEN THAT BLONDE YOUNG LADY SAT DOWN HERE TO WAIT FOR YOU— AFTER YOU CAME, I LOOKED AND IT WAS GONE, SO I THOUGHT YOU'D TAKEN IT
NO—I DIDN'T SEE IT— AND IT'S A CINCH IT DIDN'T FLY BACK OF THAT MIRROR. HM—

-:- Radio Waves and Ripples -:-

WE WANT it understood right here and now that nothing in the following account is to be construed as comment, favorable or unfavorable, on the action of the N. B. C. bosses.

We are here to report, not to judge, and when we tell you that what we have to report is that Arthur Reilly, the same who is known as the Globe Trotter, yesterday was elected by the bosses to take over the presidency of the WMAL Breakfast Club, effective today, you may appreciate our caution.

Yes, it is Arthur vs. Arthur in an N. B. C.-C. B. S. sunrise broadcast war that has seen, in the last few months, a succession of Breakfast Club presidents that suggests nothing so much as a Central American revolution.

For the nonce, Sidney Ten Eyck is the sufferer, and if we read the signs aright Sidney's suffering will include, ere long, not only the loss of his office, but his job. But that's another, sadder story.

Yes, it's Arthur vs. Arthur fighting a morning war with weapons as different as the seasons. Godfrey has humor—for want of a better classification—and Reilly has—and here a category eludes us completely, for with what does a new commentator fight a radio war? A soft voice? A poem or two? A story?

Don't ask us. Don't ask anyone. All we know is that recently N. B. C. announced three times that a picture of Reilly could be had for the writing and received, very quickly, some 1,800 replies. And if a guy can do that with soft-spoken news comments, what is to prevent him from getting his 11 p. m. following up at 7 a. m.?

WE still cling to the belief that the mean quotient of intelligence for the race lies somewhere between 6 and the point at which most, if not all, of the educators who had anything to do with our larnin' often wished it were.

Whenever we feel the fondness of our faith may merely be blindness, we think of Jack Benny and why the Nation's radio editors voted him the air's No. 1 comic. We try to forget all about the Joe Penners, the Ed Wynns, &c.

And now we've got in a spot for explaining our climbing on the Benny bandwagon. Quite frankly, we never fully understood it ourself, so perhaps it would be better if we quoted a piece from one of the press blurbs Benny's sponsor has sent us, inasmuch as they were responsible for our getting this way in the first place.

"Benny's 'gags' are given airings here in the newspaper office following each broadcast, and I have noted that social circles usually swing to the Benny subject whenever radio presentations are mentioned."

It Edna M. Kennell, radio editor of the Rochester Times-Union, who probably pinch hits in the society department once in a while, means that Benny's brand of humor strikes out in all directions, hitting high and low, we agree, though we'd much prefer to write a letter asking her what she thinks a newspaper office is, anyway.

We see no reason for the Fire Chief and the Baker going Benny or anything else. But we do suggest for Wynn a new joke library and for Penner another duck.

BLACKIE BEAR

Grandpa Dodges Death

"Well, as I was telling you last night," said Grandpa Bear, when Bettie had finished with her supper things and had settled down in her rocking chair in the corner, "I did a lot of fishing out in my country, but I didn't have to go to all the trouble with poles and lines and bait, like Blackie does. As I told you, I just sat by a little pool in the creek till some trout came jumping up to catch flies, or to jump from one pool to another and I would slap them out on the rocks.

"So one day when I had caught about a dozen of the finest trout you ever saw, and had them all piled up on a rock, along came a bad man with a gun and when he was climbing down the mountain near the stream, he saw my fishes and he wanted them so much that he decided to kill me and take them home with him. He knocked a rock over and it came tumbling down the mountain and made me look up just in time to see him raise his gun to shoot me.

"Well, he shot all right, but your Granddaddy jumped behind a rock before the shot reached him. And about that time your Granddaddy decided that he didn't care much for a fish dinner that day and so he left his fishes for that bad man with the gun.

"Yes, your old man has been more than half dead a lot of times, but he isn't so old nor so near dead, but what he has a few fights in him yet, and he may show you young bucks something before the winter is gone. I may even be able to show a friend of mine how to catch a turtle most as big as Hee-Haw.

"Dr. Coon was always wanting to know something, and so he asked Grandpa Bear how he ever happened to leave that good fishing country and come over here.

"Oh, well, that's another story," said Grandpa Bear, "and I'll have to tell you that another time. Right now I have got to go to work on some plans to keep you boys from getting lonesome. I don't want you to think there isn't any more marrow in the bones of Grandpa Bear.

No, I don't think I will sleep all this winter. There's too much fun lying around loose, and I think I am going to pick up some of it."

THE Purchasing Agent Makes A DECISION

SHE HAS checked and double-checked the family budget. She has viewed and reviewed the urgings of her friends, her family and her own desires. And she has made her decision—THEY'RE GOING TO HAVE THE TELEPHONE PUT BACK! • Being without one, she found, wasn't so good. It meant weary trips to market and the stores. It meant being cut off from friends, and the missing of good times. It meant worry at nights, lest sudden emergency should find them without a means to summon aid. But that's all over now—the telephone is coming back!
